THE NEW BRIDGEHAMPTON KMART, READY FOR SUMMER

Individuality

At Claremont Prep, students work and play together in classes that are structured, yet foster individuality and creativity. Imaginations flourish in an arts program that features painting, sculpture and ceramics studios, a wood and metal shop, photography lab, and a technical theater studio capable of producing professional sets and costumes.

Located in the heart of Lower Manhattan, financial capital of the world and New York's fastest growing residential neighborhood, Claremont Preparatory School offers a superior educational program to 1000 children ages 5 through 14 in a state-of-the-art facility. We are committed to providing our students with a strong foundation in academics, the arts and athletics and to preparing them to meet the challenges of high school, college and the global community.

Enrollment for September 2005 begins Tuesday, September 7, 2004.

GREAT GOLF ON LONG ISLAND GOES BY THE NAME LONG ISLAND NATIONAL

njoying great golf in prime time is as simple as counting yourself among those who have made membership at Long Island National a part of their game. As a member, you'll have the option of guaranteeing a Saturday morning tee time from May through September, as well as unlimited driving range privileges.

"Long Island National takes its place in a setting of golfing wonders on the eastern end of Long Island. It is a traditional heartland golf course, buffered by sea breezes fresh off the North Fork, and playing across the open savannah landscape."

— Robert Trent Jones, Jr.

Weekday and Weekend Tee Times Are Available Reservations May Be Made Five Days in Advance Twilight Rates Starting at $49

COUNTRY CLUB GOLF

ON THE NORTH FORK

The clubhouse is nearing completion and will be in full use this summer, with a wonderful grille room and dining facilities. The tennis courts are completed and will be ready for play in May, and the swimming pool is under construction and will be in use this summer. The pool house is just about finished and will be providing additional member services this spring. Our golf course has received its official MGA ratings and we are very proud of them. Our Course Rating of 74.9 and our Slope Rating of 139 from the back are among the highest on Long Island and compare most favorably with the other great courses in the area.

• Laurel Links features a 7000 yard, 18-hole championship golf course designed by award-winning architect Kelly Blake Moran. For equity membership information, call

Dan's Papers Editor Taken Into Custody Because Of Words He Wrote

By Dan Rattiner

I would like to apologize to all the people aboard Southwest flight 85 bound from Islip to Washington D.C., who were delayed on May 31 because police came on board to have me taken into custody just before takeoff.

The airport was packed with people that day, and the lines had been long at security. I really thought I might miss my flight. And so, after putting everything into the plastic trays and getting myself through the gate, I raced down to the gate, gate 8, just as they were closing the bulkhead door. I shouted at them to hold on, they reopened the door and let me in. Then, breathless, I sat down in an aisle seat toward the front of

It is a short flight to Washington D.C. from Islip, just an hour, and I thought I would spend the time looking through some articles I had articles about Iraq they had printed during the written for this newspaper. I had an idea for a run up to the war. They had gotten their facts wrong in these articles, reporting there had been weapons of mass destruction when there weren't. They believed what their reporters wrote without checking the facts. Nine of these stories were written by Judy Miller.

It occurred to me that I had written some articles about Saddam Hussein just before the war began. I wondered if I had fallen for any of the mis-information. And so I had these articles with me, about ten of them, which I had Xeroxed from the back issue files for 2002 and 2003, and I thought I would read them and see if there was anything I felt I Southampton's Kathy Hilton missed the Hamptons galas last weekend while she was busy casting at Tavern on the Green. for her new Reality TV Show on NBC. Look for her film crew in the Hamptons and Manhattan. Come September, "The Good Life" promises to place in the ratings on a par with "The Apprentice" and "The Simple Life 2: Road Trip," but that's another Hilton.

Adele Smithers-Fornaci, head of the Christopher D. Smithers Foundation, who is very well known in the Hamptons, was shocked when Yankee Captain Derek Jeter announced that Adele was the winner of Derek's Turn 2 Foundation's MVP Award. It was given to her for outstanding service to his Foundation and the presentation was made at New York City's Puck Building at the annual Turn 2 Foundation dinner.

Robert Blau, owner of the prestigious Lederer leather goods emporium on Madison Avenue, where so many Hamptonites shop, doesn't keep "time" on his hands, but on his cufflinks. They are miniature watches. They are a big conversation piece everywhere he goes.

Bridgehampton's Isabel Robins Konecky is on the board of Page Morton Black's Parkinson's Disease Foundation. Isabel, the wife of high-profile lawyer Ron Konecky, is elated that the PDF's recent gala at the Pierre Hotel raised over $500,000.

East Hampton's Sean Combs delighted surprised students by dropping in on their classroom in Manhattan's Chelsea High School last week. A Raisin in the Sun was the subject, and Professor P Diddy led the Q and A.

We were saddened to hear that the Prince of High Fashion passed away in Rome last week at the age of 57. Egon von Furstenberg is survived by his children, Southampton's Alexandre von Furstenberg and his sister, Tatiana. Their mother, fashion designer Diane von Furstenberg, is married to Barry Diller, InterActive Corp's Chairman and CEO. The late Mr. von Furstenberg, who started his career as a buyer for Macy's, was born in Switzerland and was descended from German nobility. His mother's family has a controlling interest in Fiat.

Applauding You!

We gratefully acknowledge the generous support of all who contributed to our First Annual "Applauding the Arts" Benefit Concert.

Our concert was cancelled due to Willie Nelson's wrist surgery, but that disappointment in no way diminishes the generosity of all those who came forward to donate their expertise, time and resources.

What started out as a fundraising event for the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center turned into a true celebration of community!

We Applaud You All...

read half of them, highlighting some passages in yellow magic marker.

I had also bought a New York Times and a Newsday before boarding the plane. I had high hopes for this flight. And I do read fast. And so, with the Xeroxed articles folded into the newspaper — just because the newspapers were bigger — I managed to board at the very last Except now I couldn't find these papers. As soon as I sat down, I realized that somewhere, at the gate or even before that, I had left these newspapers and newspaper clippings behind. The Times and Newsday did not matter, but the articles were particularly important to me. I told a flight attendant that, late as I was, I wanted to get off the plane to get them. She told me to tell her where I thought I left them and she'd have somebody else get them and bring them to me, if they could be found.

Ten minutes passed. The door did not close. And then two policemen came on board, looked at me, and one of them said the following: "Come with me."

I said: "Okay."

I stood up, stared worriedly at all these people on the plane sitting in their seats, and followed the policemen to a spot just outside the aircraft, in the boarding ramp. Five other people joined us. According to their badges, they were someone from security, a pilot or co-pilot from the cockpit, a flight attendant, another police officer and somebody who wore a black suit and had an earpiece. Together we were

"Do I go?" the pilot asked.

"Give us five minutes," the man with the earpiece said. "We'll know what to do by then."

"I have some bags on board," I said. "Do you want me to get them?"

"Does he have anything in baggage?" earpiece asked the attendant.

"No."

They were all ignoring me. "Come with us," the man from security said.

I hesitated. In my bag still aboard the plane were my laptop, my appointment book and numerous papers.

"I said come with me." He held out a hand. I did not take it, but I followed him up the boarding ramp to the gate, with everyone except the attendant and pilot. There, I was brought to a desk on which appeared to be a copy of the morning's New York Times. Folded. They brought me up close to look at it. They were all standing around me.

"Is this yours?"

"Yes."

"Want to explain what these papers are in-

"Those were newspaper articles I was working on," I said.

He opened the New York Times, revealing the first of my articles, which featured three identical photos of Saddam Hussein and the headline SADDAM WHO?

"That's an article about how there are all these Saddam Hussein body doubles. You don't know which one is real."

It took me a minute, but as I was explaining to these people what all this was, it dawned on me that it never occurred to anybody that I had written these articles. They thought somebody else had written them and had given them to me. Which, of course, someone had. A secretary.

"I'm the editor of this weekly newspaper."

"You mean you CAUSED these articles about Saddam Hussein and the Ayatollah to be writ-

"Yes, I CAUSED it. I wrote them. Myself."

"Why are these passages highlighted in yellow?" the security man asked.

And that launched my complicated explanation. I was very nervous. I realized I'd have one shot at this. It had to come out right, or I'd be going down into a dungeon somewhere for an interrogation.

On the other hand, since I hadn't done anything wrong, I sort of wondered what kind of dungeon they had. I've been a reporter for more than forty years. My instincts were to go there to find out.

Instead I told them about the apology from the New York Times and so forth and so on.

"So this is what I wrote," I concluded. "Is there something against the law about writing something?

"Certain things."

the security man. He shrugged.

I held my driver's license, which they already had asked to see, up against the byline of one of the articles.

"See? They match."

"So you were looking for things you could apologize for?"

"Yes. They are AGAINST Saddam Hussein," I said. Although, as I said that, I thought it was more complicated than that, but that that would do.

More silence.

"Sounds plausible to me," the security man

"Are you sure?" one of the police officers

"You can go back to your seat," the security man said. "Have a nice flight. Sorry to hold you like this."

"You can come with me," one of the policemen said.

As we were turning to go back down the ramp, the other police officer, who had written down my home address at the start of this interview, now asked me for my phone number. She wrote it down. Maybe they will put a tap on it.

"I don't blame you. I really don't," I said.

And I returned to the plane. Apparently, people had been talking about me while I was gone. My computer bag was still on the floor. This man with the hat and beard had been taken off the plane. Was that bag a bomb?

I smiled and shrugged.

"What happened?" the woman next to me asked. Her name was Susan Metz and she was traveling with a fussy one and a half-year-old on her lap. And so I told her.

The bulkhead door closed, and the plane began to move out of the gate, towed backwards as it always is. A flight attendant came over and offered me a drink.

"On the house," she said.

I told her a screwdriver would be fine. When she returned, she handed me the pilot's business card, which I reproduce on these pages.

"He offered his apologies, too. And he said if you need anything, just call him."

"Are you going to write about this?" Susan asked.

"Yes, I am," I said.

She asked if we had a website. I gave it to her. Danspapers.com

As we approached Washington, I mentioned to Susan and a man from Washington sitting on the other side of her that I guessed if we landed safely it would prove I wasn't a terrorist. Shortly thereafter, we did. I grinned.

"See?" I said.

In the New York Times that day, which I read on the plane, there was a four page pull out ad for the HBO special "IKE." This was about General Dwight Eisenhower and how it happened that, following the orders of our President and Commander in Chief Franklin D. Roosevelt, we had landed the first American, English and Free French troops onto a French beach at Normandy to liberate it from the Germans. It would be the sixtieth anniversary of D-Day on Sunday, June 6.

Frankly, we are at war again, with a bunch of murderous religious zealots who think nothing of slitting throats and hanging American civilians from bridges.

"If you are a Muslim, even an American Muslim," one terrorist in Saudi Arabia said to a hostage the other day, "we won't harm you. Just tell us where the Westerners are."

These people caused 9/11. In return, we blasted them to hell in Afghanistan. And we took them down to the dungeons in Guantanamo to get what they deserved. Then Mr. Bush invaded Iraq. Why Iraq? Iraq was westernized. Selling us oil. The zealots wanted Hussein out, too.

I was thinking of World War II, and it occurred to me that our invading Iraq might be similar to Roosevelt ordering the invasion of Russia before putting the troops into France to go after Germany. That would show the Nazis what we could do if we put our minds to it. Stalin was a horrible dictator and had killed tens of millions, mostly of his own people. He was an ally in the war against the Nazis, but he sure needed to be replaced.

"The Russians will greet us in the streets of Moscow with flowers and champagne," President Roosevelt might have said.

I have voted Democrat in my life, and I have (continued on page 30) voted Republican. George W. Bush, in my view, invaded the wrong country and lied to us so we'd allow him to do it. He has stirred up the hornet's nest, had himself flown to that aircraft carrier, a real American president in an Air Force flying suit to declare the end of hostilities. He's saved the suit. Now I hear he has in his possession the pistol that Saddam Hussein had on him when they found him down in that hole. The man is a collector. And all our former allies around the world have turned their backs on us.

Don't confuse a clamping down on our freedoms to avert terrorist attacks with this horrendous blunder Bush made. They are two entirely different things.

Our enemy is everywhere there are Muslim religious zealots. Indonesia. The Philippines. Saudi Arabia. Iran. Pakistan. Turkey. And they are trying to overthrow western governments. They will cut off people's heads. I was happy to be challenged over what I wrote if it would help out. Just so long as when they got me down to the dungeon they didn't put electric wires on my testicles BEFORE they read the articles. (Another screwup by Bush who ordered a mixed up chain of command.)

We are going to need all the resources at our command to fight this enemy, and we're going to need all the help we can get from our allies, if we still have any. We need new leadership. Maybe the Republicans could nominate somebody other than George W. Bush. A moderate, well balanced, thoughtful Republican might be just fine. Like Dwight Eisenhower. It could happen.

And no, having finally reviewed all my articles, there's not a damn thing I want to apologize for that I wrote about Iraq, Saddam Hussein, Weapons of Mass Destruction or Osama bin Laden.

Golf Explained

The Emotional Act Of Smacking A Little White Ball Very Hard

- By Dan Rattiner

This article is addressed to the estimated one hundred and fifty million people in America who don't play golf. Surely, you have wondered — what is wrong with the rest of us? You have a rock at the end of a stick. You smack a little ball with it over and over trying to make it go down a hole. And your life is divided in two. There are days you play golf. And there are days you don't play golf. Please explain this.

Well, I'll try.

First of all, there is the business of hitting a ball with a rock at the end of a stick. It seems an impossible thing to do. How can you hit something so accurately so far from where you're standing? At a driving range, where most people start out, you try it. At first, you might miss the ball a few times, but in very short order you discover this is not so hard at all. At least some of the time it makes a very satisfying click when you hit it and then it goes out very, very

There is not just a right way to hit the ball with the club. There is the right way to hit the ball with each of thirteen different clubs far. You could not throw it that far. It seems perhaps dangerous that you could hit it that far, so effortlessly and easily. How did you do it? You try it again. And again, after a few misses, there is another hit.

In very short order, you graduate to another discovery, which is the horrible, horrible truth about golf. There is only one really right way, human anatomy being what it is, to successfully hit a golf ball consistently that very, very far distance. It can be taught. It involves standing with your feet apart a certain distance, putting your weight on one foot as you start your swing, then shifting your weight to the other foot as you pull back your club, then cocking one elbow but keeping the other straight, then whipping your wrists on the downstroke at exactly the right time. Then following through

Once you come to realize the truth of this — and you will find it out soon enough if your interest has been piqued — you can consider it a challenge for you to accept. Or reject. You can watch those who have rejected it. Who go out and try to beat the system. It Does Not Work. Sooner or later, the truth is out. And you think — I can do this.

Or can you? Some people spend thousands of dollars trying to get that swing right every time. Tens of thousands. Hundreds of thousands. They get it together, and then make one little mistake, and the ball skims along the grass and winds up in the woods. "Keep your head down as you follow through," your teacher says. "You picked up. Again."

Those who build golf courses design sand traps and other obstacles to keep you from getting the ball in the hole. You are supposed to get from the beginning to the end of a hole in as few shots as possible, of course. The builders design ponds to hit over, brooks to cross, deep valleys to hit into. And as you get close to the end of each of the holes, you have already learned another truth. There is not just a right way to hit the ball with the club. There is the right way to hit the ball with each of thirteen different clubs that you carry with you, each of which is used for a different purpose and each of which is different from the other. (Getting out of a sand trap, getting out of the woods, getting near the hole when you are too close for your long-ball club, tapping the ball when on the green.) And further, there is hitting the ball hard as you can, hitting it less hard or hitting it very lightly. And all give different results.

No matter how many rounds of golf you play, you will never, ever be able to hit that ball the right way every time. The top pros, who you can watch play at Shinnecock this week, can hit a shot perfectly maybe nine times out of ten or nineteen times out of twenty. A good amateur might be able to do it eighteen out of twenty. A good local golfer might do it ten out of twenty. And then there is the vast majority of the rest of us who can do it maybe one time out of twenty.

As for the rest of what goes on when you play a game of golf — there is lots — you can take out of it many things that have nothing to do with playing a good game. There is exercise. It has been famously described as "a good walk ruined." There is nature. You might find yourself playing through a flock of wild turkeys. There is the fresh air and the trying to get it right. There is the ethics of it — the not counting every shot, or of moving the ball with your hand, or taking a "do-over" or "mulligan," which is only partially ethically wrong. Bill Clinton was a famous cheater on the golf course. Journalists have played with him and have written about it. His ethics were to cheat openly and flagrantly, and then, at the end, deny everything. He would do this cheerfully and it would drive journalists mad to see.

And there is the forgetting of your troubles. You are out there, just you, your clubs and this little white ball, alone. And if you concentrate on doing it right — it involves a certain sense of navigation, wind estimation, surveying, control, timing, discipline, touch and focus — you will lose yourself in all this for a few hours.

Unspoken, when you play a game of golf with fellow golfers, is the rule that when it comes your time to hit the ball, all movement and talk must stop. Everyone stands perfectly still. Nobody blocks the view the hitter has from his ball to the green. Everybody watches. In silence.

After the shot, everybody is supposed to express joy or encouragement. "Wow. Nice shot!" Or, "That's going for it. Too bad. Keep it up." If the shot is so bad that it is going to hit some people on the head somewhere if they don't watch out, you yell "FORE" very loud. Nobody has any clue why this word is used. But everybody knows what it means. Get down. Hold your hands over your head.

And that's golf.

I didn't play golf, during one period, for almost twenty years. I'd played a lot in high school and college, then I developed allergies that kept me off the course. After twenty years, I found a way of controlling the allergies, so I went back to playing. My first round was at the Indian Island Golf Course in Riverhead, a "public" course, where anybody with thirty dollars can play a round. I got up on the first tee with a friend, looked out toward the hole far away with the flag sticking out of it, put my tee in the ground and balanced the ball on it, then stood up, took a deep breath and heard the shout of "FORE!"

Food For Thought For Sagaponack, Bridgehampton, And Dunehampton

By Dan Rattiner

As you probably know, a wide variety of sections of the East End are making rumbling noises about becoming separate towns or villages. These include Montauk, Sagaponack, Bridgehampton and a five-mile long, one hundred-yard wide strip of oceanfront to be called Dunehampton or Southampton Beach that might have just 500 residents.

Did you know that there are exactly 5 towns in the country that only have one resident in them? These include: Ervings, New Hampshire; Hibberts, Maine; Lost Springs, Wyoming; New Amsterdam, Indiana, and until last year, Millican, Oregon.

The New York Times recently did a big article about Millican, and I thought it might be useful for all the wanna-be mayors and police chiefs out here to learn about it.

...its label bore the slogan "a balanced diet for unbalanced people, rich in vitamins J, U, M and P."

> Millican was founded by a cattle rancher named George Millican who went out from New York and settled on a flat stretch of Oregon ranchland in 1868. He made a claim for 80 acres and he put in a post office, a general store, a courthouse and a jail. At its peak, around 1910, there were 60 people living in town. By that time, the ranch had grown to about 80 acres. But then the business began to fail, George Millican died and people moved away. By 1922, there was just Billy Rahn living in Millican, and the buildings all around him fell into disrepair over the next few years. But he kept up two cottages and the general store. He lived there alone until 1946 when he sold the place to another man who just wanted to be alone, a man named cars coming down Route 20 stopped for gas or soda, for the next forty-two years. Mellin was legendary. He said he just liked being alone. He'd been married once, but his wife died of a heart attack, he said. He said he'd had two children but both of them died, one in a car crash, the other in a plane crash. People remember Bill Mellin for the product that he produced himself and sold in his store. It was called Bouncing Bunny unsweetened jack rabbit milk, and its label bore the slogan "a balanced diet for unbalanced people, rich in vitamins J, U, M and P."

An employee at the store shot Bill Mellin in the back of the head in 1988.

Last year, a family headed by Patricia and Jay Murray came down route 20 — their bakery business in Klamath Falls, Oregon, had just failed — and when they came upon this abandoned, broken down little town, they fell in love with it.

"Something stirred in my heart when I saw this place," Patricia Murray said to the Times reporter.

At that time, a bunch of squatters — desperados, people on the lam, fugitives and run-aways — were living in the remaining buildings, now on just two acres. The remaining land around the store, a still-intact, vacant, 80-acre former ranch, supported the remains of the rest of the buildings, and was owned by an individual who lived in Sisters, Oregon. The two acres and the broken down houses were for sale for $800. And then you could get the squatters out.

The Murrays paid the money, evicted the squatters, fixed up the Millican Store, opened a small post office, fixed up the two cottages in the back and re-stated the claim as an official town, now to be just the two acres. They also moved in with their daughter, their son in law, their four children, one grandchild, a cat and four chickens. Welcome to Millican, Population 9.

"It's nice not having neighbors," Patricia Murray says.

If people here in the Hamptons are serious about starting a new village, they ought to consider what is now an area in East Hampton called Northwest. From about 1740 to 1810, this was a village near Northwest Harbor that had a population as high as 100 people at one point.

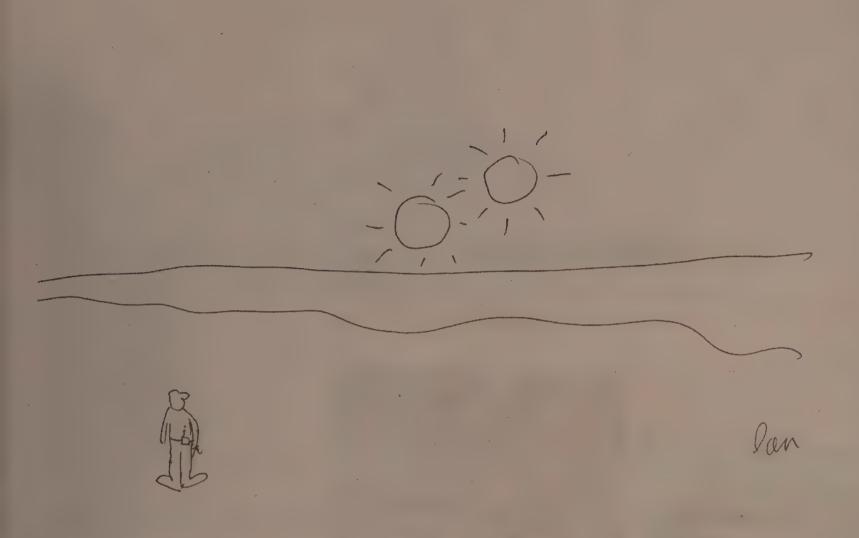

It was founded by local Bonackers after they built a dock in a bend of the harbor, at which supplies could arrive by boat for distribution to the nearby farmers. The main part of town was, and the remains of it still are, inland, along what is now Northwest Road near to Scoy Pond. There are the foundations of a schoolhouse still there. There are the remains of a mill. The East Hampton Historical Society takes people on tours through the area's trails, extending all the way down to the Harborfront and the remains of the home of a very mean man named Josiah Kirk, whose behavior involving property rights essentially drove everybody away. It also didn't help when Sag Harbor built Long Wharf and the shallows of Northwest Harbor made it an undesirable landing place.

Live there alone if you like. Charge a few bucks to the Historical Society visitors. It's nice not having neighbors.

Malfunctioning Global Positioning Device Gets Returned To The Store

By Dan Rattiner

I went to the electronics store the other day to see the latest gadgets. The salesman went in the back room and came out with this little thing about the size of a deck of cards, which he said was a Global Positioning Device.

"I've heard of that," I told him.

"See, it has a loop on the back so you can attach it to your belt," he said. "Or you can just keep it in your shirt pocket."

"What does it do?" I asked.

"It gives you your exact location on the globe," he said. "You're never lost."

"Sounds good to me," I said.

So I bought it. That evening, at home, I called my friend Fred and invited him

"It's got instructions in English, Spanish, German, French and Japanese," I said. "You've been to some of those places."

"Yes, I have," he said. "I'll be right over."

"A friend of mine had one of these on his boat," he told me when he arrived. "He said it's

"And it also finds fish. It can look down and see where the fish are in the water, so you can go there and catch them."

"I think that's called a fish finder."

"Well, that one on the boat was a whole lot bigger and more expensive than this one. Probably had more features."

"Maybe. Well, let's read the instructions. See what the features are on this one."

And so we read. We read it in English, in Spanish, in French, German and Japanese. Seemed pretty straightforward. Turn it on and it tells you exactly where you are on the planet. That was about it.

"Let's turn it on."

"Okay."

"That's right," I said. "Global Positioning Device."

chairs facing it, and pressed the ON button. Suddenly, there was a puff of white smoke. When it cleared, we were still at the table, hacking and coughing. But the surrounding room was different. It was much larger, maybe ten times as large, and instead of the frilly wallpaper on the walls that my wife had chosen, there were shiny white bathroom tiles. There were shiny white bathroom tiles everywhere in this room, on the walls, the ceiling, the floor and even on the giant bathtub that was in the middle of the room, filled with steaming hot bubbling water.

There were red and white towels on racks on the walls. Also red and white bath mats. They all said the same thing. BUCKSKILL SPA.

"I know this place," I said: "I've been here. Years ago, I went to the Buckskill Spa in Hot Springs, Arkansas."

"We're in Arkansas?"

"Yeah. And you smell all that salt and sulfur? The spa is built on the sulfur hot springs. The waters are supposed to be very healthy to

"How the hell did we get here?" my friend

"How the hell do I know?" I said.

"Well, TURN IT OFF!" TURN IT OFF!"

I pressed OFF. Suddenly we were back home. The next day I was back in the electronics store. I'd packed up the GPD. Put all the instructions in.

"It's defective," I told the salesman.

"Do you have a receipt?" he asked.

"Of course I have the receipt."

I always save the receipts. I save them in my wallet and once a month I take them out and put them in a drawer. I have receipts going back to 1996. You have to keep them seven years, you never know about things like this. That's how long the government says, anyway, in case they want to audit you.

The salesman was very cooperative after that. He went in the back and came out with another GPD. Said he didn't understand what could be wrong with the first one.

"Sometimes you get a defective thing," he said. "One bad apple spoils the barrel, I think the phrase goes. But we stand behind what we sell. Here's another one. You have any problems with this one, don't hesitate to call.

The next evening, Fred came over again.

"Set it down on the table," he said. I did. He stood behind me for awhile, looking at it, warily. He was pretty nervous.

"Looks just like the other one," he said. "At least the box does. Open it up."

"It IS just like the other one," I told him.

We took it out and set it down.

"Ready?" I asked.

"Ready."

I found the ON button, closed my eyes and gritted my teeth. And I pressed it.

Friendly Four Ton Sharks Scare The Hell Out Of Everybody

By Dan Rattiner

Basking sharks have been sighted near Georgica Pond in East Hampton. Two last week, three more this week. Many people think this is not unusual because in addition to the regular upstanding population, there are lots of basking sharks living on Georgica Pond. So what?

But these sharks are not those sharks. For one thing, the sharks who live in the houses around the pond are not the size of school buses. At least most of them aren't. And there are other differences.

Here's how Newsday reported the sightings

on Tuesday

"Adult basking sharks grow up to 33 feet long, and can weigh four tons. They have hundreds of teeth, but the teeth are small and useless. Basking sharks are filter feeders, taking water into their mouth and filtering out the tiny plants and animals that make up most of their diet. Basking sharks were placed on a protected list by the National Marine Fisheries Service in 1997. They are not considered aggressive to humans."

But then there are similarities to land sharks.

"There are no generally accepted numbers on the worldwide population of basking sharks. (But they can be seen) swimming nose to tail in a long straight line. And they usually work their way up the Atlantic Coast each year, starting in North Carolina."

On Friday, one of them fetched up dead on the beach in Southampton. It was an adolescent male, 17 feet long, and marine biologists did an autopsy and couldn't determine what killed him. After that a crew from the Southampton Village Highway Department dug a big hole in the sand and buried him.

A MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY IN SHINNECOCK

By Dan Rattiner

If someone asks to interview you for an NBC program that will be seen by 10 million people, the answer is yes. Hell, yes.

In this case, the caller was golf commentator Jimmy Roberts. And the show was the televised coverage of the U. S. Open. He would interview me about the Hamptons and it would appear on Saturday afternoon, sometime between 1 and 7, right in the middle of the thick of things, as the golfers completed the third round at Shinnecock.

The interview would be taped. Call him sometime the week before, during the practice rounds, when I would be free to come over. I told him 2 p.m., Tuesday afternoon.

The rest of this article, which is basically going to be a rant, is about how security and traffic were handled at the Open that Tuesday, a day when the pros were merely having practice rounds

Dan's Papers applied for press credentials to the Open back in April. We had filled out the forms, sent them in to Craig Smith at USGA Headquarters in Far Hills, New Jersey along with some photographs of those we wanted to attend, and we had not heard from them again. One of our applications was for me, as publisher and editor. The other was for one of our photographers. In any case, beginning about a week before the Open, we began calling the Media department at Shinnecock itself to ask where we should pick up our credentials. We either could not get through on the phone, or messages were not returned. And so, I figured that on Tuesday, when I went there, in addition to being interviewed, I would also pick up these passes so I could use them the rest of the week. I had no idea of the adventure I was about to have.

Lacking any response from Craig Smith or anybody else, I had Tom Swinimer, our Delivery Manager, drive me over to the Open and dump me out of the car just at the metal bridge that crosses County Road 39. Cars were whizzing this way and that. There was no light. But he was able to slow down almost to a complete stop before he had to speed up and get out of there.

Police were everywhere. I had called Roberts, finally, to tell him what was going on, and entering at this place was his suggestion of what I ought to do, I was puzzled to find that I was chainlink-fenced and barbwired in. The cars on the highway roared by in both directions. There was no way anybody could get out from the highway to the side of the road on either side. That's the way it was. Tight security.

Eventually, after wandering around on the side of the road for awhile, I spoke to some police officers I knew from Southampton, explained my dilemma, and got an armed escort to some trailers set up near the college and the railroad tracks. Here I remained for some time, using my cell phone, with police officers also using theirs to try to scare somebody up from either the media division or the security division to help me get in. In the security trailer, I overheard a security man say this to somebody.

"We've got to turn the sensitivity up on the wands. How do we do that?" Out the window, I could see nearby there was a security check for everybody going into the event and security men were using these wands to check people for explosives and other illegal substances. Turn up the juice. Zap those people.

Pretty soon, Jimmy Roberts himself came out from the U. S. Open to rescue me. He had heard of my plight. He'd get me a one-day pass and bring me in. And he did.

"We'll straighten this out somehow," he said after he got rezapped and I got zapped and as we climbed over the bridge into the Open grounds.

Inside the Media tent, it was determined that no press permits had ever been issued to anybody at Dan's Papers. They claimed they never had received our requests. I called the office. We had sent them in April. We had copies of them.

"Want me to fax the applications over?" I asked.

"That's okay."

But they were very nice to me. Eventually, I had my picture taken, and while my media card was being prepared, Roberts conducted the interview outside in front of some cameras. It was really fun. I made no mention at all of the great adventure I had just been through.

Afterwards, for about a half hour, I walked around, sat in some stands and watched some pros tee off on the tenth hole, hitting the ball farther than seemed humanly possible. It was just the practice round, of course. Later, I bought an ice cream. I watched some of the pros on the practice green. Then it was time to go home.

The plan was that I would call Tom wherever he was, and he and I would meet up somewhere. But where? I asked at the media desk about this. They said take the media bus to the hotel. He can pick you up at the hotel.

"What hotel?"

"The Marriott."

"There's no Marriott out here."

The woman looked at me like I was an idiot. "In Islandia," she said. I should take the media shuttle forty miles past Westhampton, past Manorville, Patchogue and Bay Shore all the way to Islandia, and then Tom could return me to the office in Bridgehampton, going past the Open the other way. Round trip in this traffic, maybe three hours. Meanwhile, he was ten minutes away.

"My office is EAST of here," I said. She blinked. "You're not from around here, are you?" I asked.

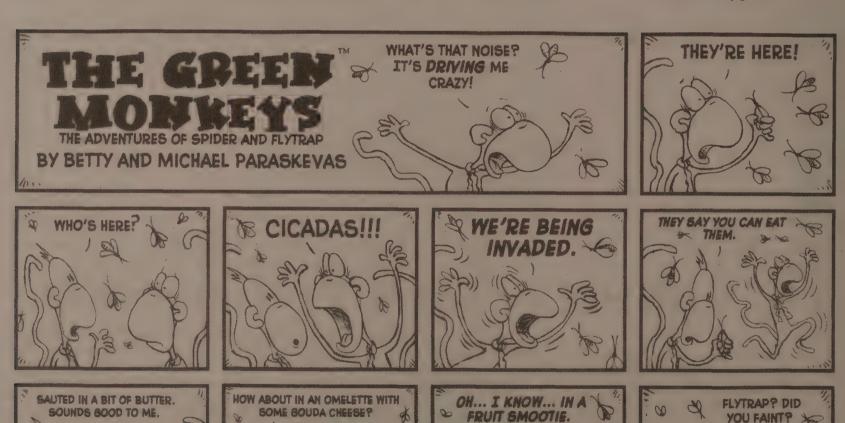

"No," she said.

Eventually, I learned the car "pickup" spot was at the corner of St. Andrews Road and 25A near the Shinnecock Reservation. The direct way, out of the Open at St. Andrews Road looked good, until I was turned back by police who told me it was blocked to pedestrian traffic. So I had to walk all the way the other way, over the bridge, down to 27A at Southampton College, and then walk along Route 27A on the shoulder of the road — sharing the space with Myths, Truths And Other Stories About Golf At The Shinnecock G.C.

By Bonnie Cox

There's rumor going around the East End about the absence of local golf professionals playing in the US Open at Shinnecock Hills this week. According to those telling the story, when the Open is held in other areas, at least one or two local players qualify and do well in the event. Their relative success is due to their familiarity with the host course. The logic then suggests that since Shinnecock Hills is so private and exclusive, none of the local players are able to play it regularly.

This is not true.

It may be true that local players aren't often seen on the course at Shinnecock Hills but that isn't why they're not playing at the US Open. In the field of 156 players this year, 76 made it through the exemptions by: winning previous events, such as US Open, British Open, PGA of America Championship, or Masters; ranking among the top money leaders on the PGA Tour official money list (2003, 2004, lifetime) or the Nationwide money list; or being amateur (if still amateurs) winners of US Amateur Championship, US Amateur Public Links Championship, US Junior Amateur Championship, USGA Senior Amateur Championship, British Amateur Championship.

The remaining 80 slots were earned through local and sectional US Open Qualifiers. Rick Hartmann, pro at Atlantic Golf Club in Bridgehampton made it through the local qualifier at Southampton Golf club on May 17th but didn't make it through the sectional qualifier at Canoe Brook Country Club in Summit, New Jersey earlier this month.

SUCCESSFUL STRATEGIES FOR GOLF SPECTATORS

By Bonnie Cox

At long last it's here. The US Open at Shinnecock Hills is in progress. Everyone, it seems, has a strategy for maximizing their US Open enjoyment.

For those lucky enough to have tickets, a viewing strategy is required. This is a plan for seeing players up close or seeing the miracle shots they are hitting. There are many types of viewing strategies.

Follow the Crowd. Just watch wherever the crowd seems to be going and join the parade. Frequently, this results in seeing others in the crowd but no golfers or golf shots. Not recommended.

Stay Glued to One Spot. Exactly what it sounds like. This strategy means getting to a spot at the front of a grandstand or gallery and holding on for dear life and not leaving it. The advantage is being able to watch everyone who comes by. This is good if it's a landing area for drives. The disadvantage is that from this spot, the only action you see might be golfers walking by. You are may also need to defend your position from poachers and pushy people.

Pick a Hole. Similar to Stay Glued, but usually either a green or a tee. This allows you to see everyone putt or everyone drive. If you pick a tee, you're done early and then need to find another spot. If you pick a green, it can be a long wait for the first golfers to arrive. One guy I know picks a par 5 hole where he can see players going for the hole with their second shots.

Pick a Player. At smaller tournaments this is easier to do than at an event like the US Open. The sheer number of visitors at the US Open makes it hard to stay with one player for an entire round. But when executed in the right circumstances, Pick a Player allows you to see almost every shot by one player over the entire course. This is wonderful for those who have just one favorite, though it's hard to follow a popular player like Phil Mickelson or Tiger Woods because their galleries are so large.

Pick a Tee and Green. Several guys I know like this one. They position themselves at one of the first tees and watch almost everyone tee off. When the last golfer has teed off, they head to a green toward the end of the course, and settle in for the rest of the day. This gives them the opportunity to see different aspects of several players' games. It worked at the 2002 US Open at Bethpage.

Somebody must have hit an errant shot, is what I thought. Usually you get beginners or duffers on a public course. They move around, talk when people hit. When they hit, they could hit the ball almost anywhere. I looked up to see who might be getting it. And one second later, I saw stars and found myself lying flat on my back on the ground.

"You're supposed to duck down," my friend said as he drove me away from Indian Island toward one of those emergency walk-in places. "Not look up."

I had a concussion. But the following year, I was back on the course. And I've been back since. Always wear a hat.

The highlight of my early career on the golf course was in the last match of the season when I was a sophomore in high school and I had just made the golf team. Our high school was tied with another high school for the conference championship. We could beat them, or we could lose to them.

The way it worked back then was called match play. The best player on each team played one another and the second best players on each team played one another. The winner of each nine holes got a point. And the winner of the match as a whole got a point. If there was a tie the point was split. For each pair of golfers, three points were at issue.

The first and second players, the four of them, constituted the first foursome out. Then came the foursome consisting of the third and fourth players, and finally the foursome of the fifth and sixth players. The coaches and assistant played a foursome behind that, not for points, but to get to know one another. Any other golfers for either team, the "bench," played behind that, not for points either, but just to get to know one another.

This last match of the season was the first time I was actually going to play for points. Until then, for the first ten matches of the year, I was a "bench" player. Now, the six man for my high school was sick. I was called in.

At the time, I could play in the low nineties consistently. I was a small, skinny kid. But as the member of a country club with my parents, I had played a lot of golf. Now I would help decide the conference championship.

The seventeenth hole was a short one, a par three. As you, dear reader, are assumed to not know much about the game, that means that a pro should be able to make this with one drive to the green where the hole was, and then two putts to drop it down. As I got up to the tee, I saw our coach, who should have been in the foursome behind me, pacing around at the back of the green in front of me.

I hit up, making the green. My opponent hit short, down on the fairway. As I walked to my ball, the coach, Mr. Sheehan, came over to me.

"How are you doing?" he asked.

"I beat him by a stroke on the front nine," I said. "We're even on the second nine with these two holes to go. Looks pretty good."

Buying It

The Tricky Business Of Preserving Open Land In East Hampton Town

By Matt Stevenson

Two weeks ago I reported on a story about a piece of property in Montauk that was recently purchased for preservation. The driving force behind the purchase was a committee of neighbors who lived in a group of historic houses nearby. They didn't want to see the parcel developed because a development would interfere with the unique landscape architecture of (and water views from) their homes. So after years of thwarting the owner's attempts to obtain building variances at the level of local government, they had decided to pool their resources, buy the property, and have done with it forever. Through their efforts, they had managed to convince the Town of East Hampton and the South Fork chapter of the Nature Conservancy to contribute almost two-thirds of the money for the purchase.

The preservation of that land was a refreshing instance of cooperation between private citizens

My cynicism flag went up immediately as I read the specs for the story. It was my first day on the job at Dan's Papers, and thus my introduction to the issue of land preservation on the East End. (Outside of a few parking tickets in Sag Harbor it was my first encounter with any > form of municipal government in the Hamptons.) And something already seemed screwy. After effectively preventing a property owner from building on his own land, the local government was now contributing almost a million dollars to protect a few people's beach views?

In the days to come I discovered that things in this case were not the sordid thing I just described. The East Hampton contribution to the purchase did not come out of the general budget, but from a reserve called the Community Preservation (continued on next page)

Community Preservation Fund that Governor Pataki had created in 1998 by instituting a 2 percent buyer's tax on all purchases of new land on the East End. The Nature Conservancy was a reputable nationwide environmental group that only worked to preserve lands that met its rigorous scientific criteria for biodiversity and vulnerability. And the neighbors' houses turned out to be of considerable historical significance and architectural value; they were among the first houses built in Montauk, and they were all magnificent Victorian summer "cottages" built as a complex around a central dining hall by Stanford White, the architect who built much of New York in the Gilded Age. The complex was laid out by landscape architect Frederick Olmstead, the designer of Central Park, and indeed, if anything fit the description of "environmentally and culturally significant lands" that was enumerated in the language of the 1998 Community Preservation Act, it was this section of Montauk.

The eminent worthiness of the Montauk parcel did not change the practical difficulties and philosophical problems inherent in the concept of community preservation. But it did make me forget about them for a little while. The preservation of that land was a refreshing instance of cooperation between private citizens, public advocacy groups, and civic government: another convergence of historical and ecological interests in a special place where the convergence of history and nature seems to be a sort of local theme. To quote Ed Ris, the overseer of the Third House Museum in Montauk, it helped keep Montauk "the way it's always been." If the Community Preservation Fund could be used for something like that, I reasoned, then it had to be a good thing.

This past week I was assigned a story on another preserved parcel in East Hampton. It is a 42-acre plot off Three Mile Harbor Road that used to be the site of the Springs Nursery. If you haven't seen it for a while, it's because it's been fenced off since the beginning of 2003, when the town conducted chemical tests on the soil to confirm that it hadn't been polluted by improper fertilization at the nursery. (Apparently the nursery used to own an H. C. Davis and Sons soil mixer: an expensive, pow-

Shop 'til You Drop. This strategy involves spending a lot of time and money inside the merchandise tent looking over the US Open logo apparel, bags and gifts. A must do for die hard souvenir shoppers. Looked down on by true enthusiasts.

Eat Your Heart Out or Belly Up to the Bar. Either one is done inside a hospitality tent. More suited to those who don't care about the outcome. Becomes a more popular strategy when the weather is inclement.

Watch it On TV. The advantage of this strategy is that you can do it on the course or at home. At the Open, TVs will project the rounds, for viewers who can't get close enough to the players to actually see them. You get the feel of being at the course but not the close up look you had hoped for. However, you can say you were there. It's also possible to watch on TV in the hospitality tents. This can be combined the with Eat Your Heart Out or Belly Up to the Bar strategies.

Stay Home. This strategy can mean watching the Open on TV or not. There are those who prefer to do this.

Those who are out here for a weekend like any other weekend should be able to have it. People who are afraid of the extra traffic will stay away. Then the rest of us will have an easier time getting out and about. The following strategies take advantage of less traffic.

Shop. It will be easier, particularly east of the Canal. During the 1995 US Open, local merchants saw big decreases in the business and fear it will happen this year, too. They will be very happy to see any shoppers this weekend. Service in the shops will probably improve.

Dine out. The people who stayed away won't be in the restaurants, so go. Just be sure to have a reservation.

Movies. The lines may be shorter here as well. Lots of summer hits are playing this weekend. Check the listing.

Have fun. A good strategy any weekend.

tribe, Reverend Michael Smith loves to tell stories. Reverend Smith is the pastor of the Presbyterian Church on the Shinnecock Reservation in Southampton. It is the same church where he was baptized, where he took communion, and went to Sunday school. As he'll tell you, he explored the country and many areas of life before he became a pastor and returned to the place that had laid his religious foundations.

Mr. Smith was raised on the Shinnecock reservation. He grew up playing golf with his father, Elmer, who was the first American Indian superintendent of the Shinnecock Golf Club in Southampton. where the U.S. Open is being held this week. Michael Smith graduated from Southampton High School in 1967, and attended SUNY College in Old Westbury. He later became interested in American Indian law, which he studied at Hofstra Law School. He was involved in many programs to benefit youth and minorities including "A Better Chance" in New Hampshire, where he was a mentor to young Indian Americans who were on the track to college. In 1976, Mr. Smith was asked to study at the Princeton Seminary in New Jersey, where he earned a Masters in Divinity. His first funeral as a pastor was his father's in 1980. Before he came back to serve in the church at the reservation, he and his wife moved to Arizona and took part in the Sanctuary Movement, fighting for asylum for indigenous people on the Navajo reservations. For the last twelve years, Smith has worked with Seafield, an alcohol and drug rehabilitation center in Hampton Bays as a pastoral councelor. "It's not a job," he assures me, "none of my jobs are jobs."

As we sat in his own sanctuarv, we spoke about Mr. Smith's return to the church of his youth and to the reservation. He looked around and swept the air with his hand as only a Reverend can do. "Many people don't have a place," he said. "This is a place. This church, this reservation. It's something you can only fully appreciate after traveling, when you can compare it with what else you've seen." The reservation surprised me with its un-hemmed natural beauty when we drove in. Of course the trees, the > grass and the flowers are the same, and the church is covered with those cedar shingles, grey from the rain, of many homes on eastern Long Island. Somehow the land looks better here - maybe because it isn't completely man icured, and the houses blend into the landscape. The church is gorgeous as well, and when I commented on it, Mr. Smith told me its story. The original church, now two hundred and fifty years old, was dragged from across Shinnecock Bay in 1930. "It used to freeze completely solid, and cars could drive over it," he said, looking towards the bay. After the hurricane of '38, the church was shifted, and no longer faced the right direction. The reservation kept the old sanctuary and built one that would face east.

Beyond the physical attributes of the reservation, Mr. Smith discussed the feeling he gets living here. He believes that this community has created a real base for people, one that he and many others find themselves returning to. "You know that old saving, it takes a village to raise a child?" he asked, "Well, this village raised its children. If you were doing something wrong, all the adults knew who you were and could correct you on the spot or take you to your parents!" He laughed. Mr. Smith went on to describe how attitudes have changed rapidly in the last few decades, how the attitudes of the younger generation sometimes show less respect for traditional values. "[The traditions] are given lip service, but not much more. We're not immune here to the larger society," he said, "outside attitudes are filtered into the community. It's strange because my generation was the Me generation, flower children, and we produced generation X. Now how did that happen?" He didn't offer an answer, but that values have changed deeply concerns him.

Throughout our conversation, it became clear that the changing values are affecting more than community The construction of a casino on Shinnecock land is a controversial issue now in eastern Long Island. Some advocate the revenue it will bring in for the reservation and the surrounding area. Others are concerned with the already disturbing L.I.E traffic. Mr. Smith looks at the issue in a different light. Although he's a Reverend, he understands the fun of a casino. "I was always good at math, and I enjoy the logic," he defends, "but I don't have a position on [the issue]. The casino probably wouldn't be on this reservation, anyway, but on some land in Hampton Bays. It's pristine waterfront land, why would you destroy

Mr. Smith expressed similar feelings about the deteriorating bond between Shinnecocks and the Shinnecock Golf Club. This is the first time in history that the Shinnecocks are not in-

Qualifier at Canoe Brook are: Mike Caporale of Manhasset, John Forster of Sayville, Charles Bolling Jr of Glen Cove, Rob Corcoran of Brookville, Marc Turnesa of Rockville Centre, Lawrence Scortichini of Mt Sinai, and Darrell Kestner of Glen Cove.

There are at least two locals, however, who will be playing. It's my understanding that Donald McDougall, Head Golf Professional at Shinnecock Hills, will be playing on the host club pro exemption. Raymond Floyd, a summer resident of Southampton and winner of the 1986 US Open at Shinnecock, is in the field as well Think you're a pretty good golfer? Want to represent the East End at future US Opens? Think if you just played a little more and spent more time at the range you could be a contender? Perhaps you could be.

The first thing you need is a handicap of 1.4 or better on the USGA Handicap Index. Of all the golfers I know, many of them excellent players, only two or three have such low handicaps. One of them has a garage filled with at 600 golf clubs of different types. He also has a driving range of sorts in his back yard and hits tons of balls. To stay competitive, he plays regularly in two different leagues. And he maintains his fitness and endurance with a strong conditioning program, including collecting all his range balls from the woods by himself.

Surviving the competition won't be easy. The sheer number of players trying to qualify for the 80 slots at this year's US Open was staggering. In May, more than 8,000 players began the local qualifying playoffs at 107 courses around the United States. Approximately 750 of them advanced to the sectional playoffs in June at 13 other sites. That's a lot of competition.

You will need to be able to play well under pressure, both the pressure of competing against a field of players in a given tournament and the pressure of playing well on a course you may not have seen before. It's relatively easy to play well on your home course. You've certainly played it a lot. You've worked out a lot of the kinks through experience through all kinds of conditions. You've tamed the killer double dog leg par five. After losing numerous balls into a given water hazard, you know the exact club to hit in any situation.

For inspiration, read "Miracle on the 17th Green" by James Patterson and Peter De Jonge, a wonderful myth about an avid fiftyish amateur golfer whose marriage is falling apart. He then loses his advertising job. He goes to qualifying school and makes it to the senior tour. It's one of the most endearing books involving golf I've ever read. I happened upon this book while looking for something else at the library. It's on my list of "you really have to read this" books, even for non-golfers. You'll want to ditch your job and head off to Q School more than you do already.

Suppose you're all fired up now. You want the reward, you're willing to take the risk. What else do you need? A golf guru to help you with your swing and short game. There are excellent teaching pros here on the East End. Just call your favorite club and book those lessons today, or check with friends for their recommendations.

Practice, practice, practice. And more practice

You need a caddy. This is your "go to" guy or gal, who keeps you focused, helps you plan your shots, celebrates with you, commiserates with you, gets you to the tee on time.

In addition to your swing doctor, you might need what's called a performance consultant, someone to help you with your attitude and mindset. One of the most popular and well known is Dr. Bob Rotella, Director of Sports Psychology at the University of Virginia, and author of "Golf is Not a Game of Perfect." One of his maxims is that "golfers must learn to love the challenge when they hit the ball into the rough, trees or sand. The alternatives — anger, fear, whining, and cheating — do no good." It can take hard work to make that change!

There's one more thing you need: a gallery. The most important gallery is family and friends. People who know you and love you no matter how you play. The people who celebrate all your good shots. The people who help you keep your chin up after the bad rounds.

Put this altogether and, while you may not ever make it to the Open, you'll play better and have more fun. Then it won't matter whether you qualify or not.

When people think of Hamptons celebrities, they often think of those who are part of the summer social scene, such as Sean "P. Diddy" Combs, or those who find themselves embroiled in whatever controversy occupies the media, such as Billy Joel or Martha Stewart. But there are celebrity couples who eschew the Hamptons spot light, choosing instead to enjoy a simple peace and quiet that cannot be found in New York City. Matthew Broderick and Sarah Jessica Parker are such people. Leaving East Hampton's mansions to those who prefer the limelight, Broderick and Parker have spent many summers renting in the much more low-key Bridgehampton, where they eventually bought a simple, five bedroom Victorian house built in the 1850s at the end of the summer of 2001.

Although Broderick and Parker are not strangers to celeb-hangouts like Nick and Toni's and Della Femina, they are just as often seen shopping at Citarella in Water Mill to enjoy a home-cooked meal — Parker has said that "it's not our natural inclination really to leave the house." They avoid most of the big summer parties, although they couldn't resist attending a Fourth of July soiree thrown one summer by

Combs. While they thought the crowd would be "too glamorous" for them, they found Combs's charm, humor and Gatsbylike lifestyle too much to resist. Last summer, they also attended Steven Spielberg's benefit for the charity he founded, Survivors of the Shoah Visual History Foundation, which works to videotape and preserve the testimonies of Holocaust survivors and witnesses before they have all passed on.

Broderick and Parker come from strikingly different backgrounds. Broderick grew up in Manhattan's West Village where he and Parker now live in a townhouse — the son of actor James Broderick and playwright

Patricia Broderick. Born on March 21, 1962, he attended the progressive Walton school and, after graduation, studied very briefly with legend Uta Hagen. Although his parents were never major celebrities, they worked consistently enough to support Broderick and his two older sisters. Parker, on the other hand, grew up in Nelsonville, Ohio, living for a time on welfare. Her parents, Stephen Parker and Barbra Forste, had three children before Parker was born on March 25, 1965, and her morther then had four more children with her second husband, Paul Forste.

Parker has said that "it's not our natural inclination really to leave the house."

The stories of Broderick's and Parker's acting breaks are quite different, too. Broderick spent much time backstage, watching his father. For a time, he thought he would work in a back stage capacity, having burst into tears at the age of 7 or 8 when offered the chance to perform in a play with his father. Then, during high school at Walden (which he chose for its theater program), he won a part in A Midsummer's Night Dream after which he knew that he wanted to act professionally. Thereafter, he started auditioning for parts in film, television and theater, eventually winning a role in Harvey Fierstein's Torch Song Trilogy in 1982 as Fierstein's adopted gay son. Although his agent advised against taking a gay role, Broderick liked the part and wanted an acting job. He was awarded the Outer Critics Circle Award for his performance. He was also cast to star in the films Max Dugan Returns and War

Parker was trained early as a singer and dancer at, among other places, the American Ballet Theater and the Professional Children's School. She danced as a child with the Cincinnati Ballet and even sang with the Metropolitan Opera. In 1976, Parker was cast in Broadway's The Innocents, and her family moved to New Jersey. Soon thereafter, she got her big break, when she became the third actress cast to play the role of Annie on Broadway. She made her film debut at the age of 14 in the 1979 film Rich Kids, and was noted for her work in the TV sitcom "Square Pegs", which aired from 1982-83. She attended high school first at Dwight Morrow in New Jersey, and then graduated from Hollywood High.

Broderick and Parker met in 1992, following Parker's relationships with Robert Downey, Jr. and John F. Kennedy, Jr. Parker's brother Toby, an actor, was rehearsing an off-Broadway one-act play directed by Broderick, and Parker paid a visit. (Parker's brother Pippin is also an actor.) The connection was immediate — Parker says it was love at first sight — and the couple engaged in the typical New York City volved in the U.S. Open at this location. In past years, there have been at least 9 or 10 Shinnecocks working on the grounds crew for the tournament; this year, that is down to 2. Relations have declined to the point that the club is no longer organizing parking on Shinnecock land, as it has in the past. Instead, the USGA is using a local farmer's land. "I find this year's Open difficult," Smith said, "because ties that have existed for generations have fallen by the wayside. But life changes." When Mr. Smith recalls the history between the Shinnecocks, his own family, and the club, his memories are often pleasant. Smith's grandfather worked at the course as a member of the grounds crew, as did many Shinnecocks at the time. Soon his son, Elmer, worked there alongside two brothers to become the superintendent of the course for the next twenty-four years. The position was handed down to Smith's brother, Pete, who had been working alongside his father for years. Men on the reservation have always been involved with the course, whether as players or caddies or members of the grounds crew. The Shinnecocks built the old golf course and, in 1930, built the new one. The land the course sits on was once, of course, Shinnecock land. "There was a positive relationship between the Shinnecocks and the club," said Smith, "Many of the men here had their first jobs working for my father before they went to college. The old Pro down there, Charlie Tom, gave me my first club. It had a wooden handle which he had to cut down to my size."

Mr. Smith described playing at night with his brothers and his dad for as long as he can remember. "When my brother Pete's high school team won 3rd place in the State, my father looked at me and said, 'let's teach 'em.' We played Pete and his friends on the back nine at Shinnecock, and we did beat them, although Pete would never admit it." The Reverend worked on the land at Shinnecock Golf Club himself, although never full time. When the club found remnants of the old course, which had been covered in 1931, they asked Mr. Smith to identify the greens and bring it back to playing condition. "It was just a wild field," he said, "full of bull briars and blackberry brambles. I loved to see it transform, to reclaim history." Although he never found the tee boxes, Smith found how the bunkers had been placed and built makeshift fairways. "We laid out a practice course of the six holes we retrieved. There were only five greens but one was so big that we made it a double green." When I asked whether he had worked alongside his brother, Mr. Smith grinned. "Pete liked to watch," he said, "he was the superintendent!" After Smith left the course, they put a drainage system in, and kept it as a practice course. Now the giant PGA Merchandise building sits on top of the old course. "It's going to need some work," said Smith. Smith doesn't blame either side for the damaged relationship between the Shinnecocks and the club, at least openly, but he is disturbed by it. "It's amazing. People tend to appreciate history. That's why this year's Open is surprising. Only someone who wasn't thinking would cut those ties."

By Emily J Weitz

It began with a thirteen-year-old boy and a mother who didn't scoff at his ideals. He believed he could make a difference, and she didn't call him naïve. She didn't tell him he wouldn't understand until he was older. She didn't tell him the way the world does and doesn't work. He saw something that he wanted changed, and instead of waiting around for help or for fate or for old age, he began paving the road to change.

Jeremy Feigenbaum is now a seventeen-year-old junior at Southampton High School, but you wouldn't guess it from his eloquent manner of speaking. I called him for an interview and I asked the man that answered the phone if I could please talk to Jeremy. He informed me that it was with Jeremy to whom I was already speaking. I suppose he would have to be mature beyond his years to have begun an organization like his, directly following his bar mitzvah.

The organization is called The Children's Summer Lunch Program, and it meets a need that may have been difficult to conceive of in this world that is sometimes so overwhelmed with glitz and glimmer. Perhaps, most people don't think of people in need in the Hamptons. But many of us who live here know that the Hamptons has many faces, and they don't all match the faces on the covers of trendy magazines. Some of the faces that have become obscured in the shadows of shining starlets are the faces of children who could use a little

Jeremy grew up in New York
City for the first ten years of his life, so the sight of homeless people and people in need was not unfamiliar to him. But just because it became a part of his life didn't mean he was willing to accept it. He remembers seeing people in Armani suits literally stepping over people begging on the street, and he believes that "people should never just be walked over."

When he moved to the Hamptons, the poverty wasn't as blatant and in your face. But Jeremy saw that there was still poverty, homelessness, and necessity. It didn't take him long to fill that need.

When he turned thirteen, Jeremy had a bar mitzvah. Instead of flower centerpieces, he opted to have bags of groceries. This is not completely unheard of, though the socially conscious thirteen-year-old birthday boys are in the minority. When given the opportunity to choose the theme for the decorations, Jeremy chose "food for kids." He and his mother made some calls to the Human Resources Department to see what the need was, and they were directed to the school districts. His mother Marilyn took him to the supermarket and they bought thirteen bags of groceries to decorate the tables and then go to this cause.

But after they dropped off these grocery bags, Jeremy asked his mother what was next. He wanted to continue in this vein of community service, but didn't know where to go. That's when the organization was born. "It was a big leap," Jeremy said, but the Children's Summer Lunch Program took off running. As the leader of the program's junior committee, with his mother as the chair, Jeremy has watched his efforts produce rewards.

The Children's Summer Lunch Program acknowledges the thousands of people on the East End who live below the poverty level of $17,029 for a family of four. In 2003, there 231 children in Bridgehampton and East Hampton who were eligible for the program. During the school year, most of these kids are enrolled in free or reduced lunch programs, but in the summer, what do these kids do? During the summer lunch program last year, 158 of those eligible children received bagged lunches and breakfasts. Each week, each child was provided with 2 quarts of Parmalat milk, cereal, peanut butter, jelly, tuna, canned chicken, mayonnaise, bread, canned fruit, and cookies.

So what does the founder of such a program and the head of the junior committee do when he graduates from high school in two years? Jeremy was decisive in his answers. He's wanted to be a sportscaster since he was ten years old, and now that he's begun the college search, he's learned that one of the best programs in the country is at Syracuse University. Right now, it sounds like that is where he would like his future to lead. While he feels fulfilled and inspired by community service, he doesn't want to make a career out of it. He lives his life in an admirable way. He has his dreams and he is headed for them. Meanwhile, along the way, he is trying to help as many people as he can, and to never turn away from the truth.

But Jeremy Feigenbaum is also a seventeen-year-old boy. I asked him what his hobbies are, what he does for fun, and he suddenly sounded that way I expect a seventeen-year-old kid to sound.

"I'm a die hard Yanks and Rangers fan," he said. "My favorite sport to watch is ice hockey... I'm on the Varsity tennis team in the spring, and I love hanging out with my friends. Right now, I really want to be spending time with my erful machine whose website touts its ability to mix sludge, municipal garbage, and chemical fertilizers as well as soil. The East Hampton Town dump, incidentally, uses a similar machine for compost making.) For some weeks during this period, a police cruiser guarded the front gate.

To the town's credit, they have spent carefully on the Springs Nursery land. They held off on purchasing it last year until they had determined that it was not contaminated. (While their purchase price of $1.7 million dollars was a full million higher than the $700, 000 appraisal of the land in 2000, that is presumably because it was still considered a potential biohazard area at that time.) And most recently, they have rejected a costly plan to turn the whole of the property into recreation grounds in the style of New York's Central Park. The plan for this "natural" park, the brainchild of a Springs Nursery Committee appointed to consider viable options for the land, includes an artificial pond, a hedge maze, and $2.5 million for the purchase of non-native florae to be transplanted to the site. While they thanked the committee, the Board had strong reservations about the plan, and will only implement it very selectively.

"I have a problem with creating an artificial environment in a natural area," said Town Supervisor Bill McGintee at the meeting. "I'm not opposed to it, but I would like to see a scaled-down version." The version that he was not opposed to, he told me in an interview, could include "some added vegetation to brighten it up, maybe a little walking path." But the property, he noted, "was meant to be purchased by the Community Preservation Fund as an open area."

"Springs has double the density of any of the hamlets in East Hampton, and the nursery land is one of the few open spaces in the area," reiterated Councilwoman Debra Foster. "I like the idea of community planting. It's just too much, too soon."

Unlike the Montauk land, the Springs Nursery plot is of little particular cultural value, and it is not an entirely natural area, either. I went out to see it this past Saturday. While there is a forest of indigenous trees and plants around the perimeter of the property, there is a large bald spot in the center where the nursery used to purvey its own non-native plants to the landscapers of the area. That spot is lumpy and grassless now; while it is not officially contaminated, it doesn't look very hospitable to plant life. (Perhaps this is what Councilwoman Foster meant by "open.") It hardly seems to be a likely candidate for preservation.

I also spoke with a few people who live and work in Springs while I was there. Though they had a few choice things to say about the Town's preservation purchases in general, they largely agreed with the Board's plan for the nursery land in particular. They didn't want to see a $5 million park there; they wouldn't be completely opposed to some inexpensive cleanup, "though now that it's preserved," said one man, "I would just as soon have it go wild." What was at issue for them was that the land had been preserved at all.

"There's a lot of better things they could have done with that property," the same man told me. "One thing this area really needs is some industrial facilities. Little storage spaces and offices for working people to use."

"The cost of living is going up every year out here," interjected one of his co-workers. "And the price of labor is going down. You can't buy a sandwich, a bag of chips, and a soda at a deli for less than $11 dollars out here."

"I've been making good money at cash-paying jobs my whole life," the other replied, "and I'm not saying I always saved as much of it as I could have, but it's impossible to get ahead."

"You'll find that the 'locals' are a dwindling group. People can't get by working the same jobs they always did, so they just leave. They take a $700,000 check for a house that was worth $20,000 thirty years ago, and they leave."

I learned on my trip to Springs that "community preservation" is not as simple as heading off the next influx of developers with government land purchases. A community is something both inextricably related to and completely different from the landscape that it exists upon. To preserve either usually takes well-spent money and honest effort, and preserving the first thing is the far more difficult task, which can only be achieved through the occasional sacrifice of the second. But sometimes, for some communities, even that is not enough.

Once again, there was a puff of white smoke. This time, when it cleared, we found ourselves sitting on some rocks staring out across a field. into some woods. And it wasn't dark anymore. It was morning, with a big sun in the sky and a whole lot of giant black bats flying around above some trees. There was also a volcano rumbling beyond the woods, and - I could hardly believe it - a giant dinosaur looming over the trees looking at us. It must have been thirty feet tall, howling and growling and spitting fire. It began heading right toward us.

"Maybe TWO million years. I'm really not sure. I think we were in the exact same place, but two million years ago. Isn't there some kind of setting?'

"There's a setting for longitude and there's a setting for latitude."

"We didn't have time to look at any of those." "Look, the owner has told me the customer is always right. You have the receipt? Yes, I know you do. It's in the box, just like yesterday, right? Just tell me what you want to do."

"I want you to take it back."

"Of course we will take it back. I think I have to point this out to the owner of the store, two of these things not working right. Maybe he shouldn't be dealing with a manufacturer who makes defective things like this. I'm terribly

"Would you give me my money back?"

"Well, you can see from the sign over there the store policy. We do exchanges and we give credits. So, I can give you a store credit. You can buy anything else in the store."

"Like what?"

"We have night-vision binoculars, like they have in the Army. Very popular. We have hoot owl wall clocks. Hoots the hour. We have atomic clocks. Checks the exact time down to the very millisecond, every half hour by satellite with the official atomic clock down in Washington. We have the new cell phones that take pictures you can send to your friends. We have scanners and DVD burners. We have these things you put on the grille of your car, high pitched things that go off when you drive that keep the deer away. We have...'

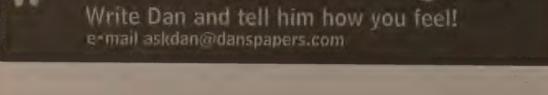

"Maybe I ought to bring in my friend Fred."

"Well, I'll just take back this defective GPD and give you this store certificate here. Wait, I'll fill it out. Maybe you'd like to give it to somebody as a gift certificate for Christmas. That's just in 194 days. We have a Palm Pilot that can give you that information, and then count it down, set off an alarm and blink and beep every five seconds until you take care of

He handed me the green store certificate, a piece of paper with the amount of the sale written in old fashioned writing, and elaborate design that made it look like a twenty-dollar bill or something.

"Absolutely fool proof," he said. "Nobody can use it but you. Every store in the chain has a machine that checks it out for authenticity. Of course, every week you don't use it, it becomes worth five dollars less. So. You're all set. Anything else I can do for you?"

Mr. Sheehan took out a pencil and pad and did some math. "You have to win at least one of these two last holes for us to win the conference championship," he said. "It's up to you."

I froze. Three putted. And my opponent, who was about as good as I was, rallied and tied with me. We picked up the balls and walked through a woods to the eighteenth tee. Since I had won the hole before the seventeenth, it was my "honor" to hit first. And I will never forget what happened.

I leaned down, put my tee in the ground, put my ball on the tee and stood up to survey this first shot. Around the green, 450 yards away, there were about a hundred people, all looking at me. Word had traveled fast. The whole clubhouse had already heard that the conference championship lay in the balance to be decided by these two golfers.

This eighteenth hole was a par four, meaning a drive and a chip shot to the green. Then two putts to get down. There was a woods on the left. An out of bounds and a paved road running alongside on the right. A shallow brook crossed just in front of the green, too far to hit to with your first shot, something you had to pitch over with your second shot. The hole was straight, with a wide fairway, and no hills. A very easy hole.

I had been nursing a slice all day. I'd hit it straight and it would curve off to the right. If I did this on this hole, I'd go out of bounds. There'd be penalties. So I took a deep breath, and aimed to the left, at the last minute decided to break my wrists extra hard to make the ball go straight instead of slice, (figuring one of these two adjustments would work) and hit the ball 250 yards straight as an arrow, a perfect shot high and far, deep into the woods on the left. The crowd at the green immediately broke into a trot to go find my ball.

My opponent then got up on the tee — he, too, was a sophomore in high school — and, blinking nervously and waiting for everyone to get off the fairway in front of him, which they did, swung with all his might and dribbled the ball down the fairway maybe fifty feet. And so we started down the fairway.

Coach Sheehan and I walked to my ball in the woods, well out of the way of my opponent, we expected.

I waited in that woods for a long time to take my next shot. The etiquette with golf is that the person farthest from the hole is always who hits next. The news came that my opponent had dribbled his second shot and then dribbled his third shot. His fourth shot, another dribble, went by me and into the brook. He would have a two shot penalty, picking up the ball and throwing it back over his shoulder, to get it out. I was hitting my second.

Under the circumstances, there seemed no need for me to try to get the ball all the way through the woods to the green. It would be better to just punch it lightly out to the fairway. Then I'd have a clean third shot over the brook to the green. Nothing to it.

I did this.

And then, even now, decades later, I can remember what I did with my next shot. I can even feel it as I write this. I still don't quite understand it.

Hampton Club Etiquette

After years of noise complaints and unwanted traffic, the Hamptons local officials are finally cracking down on nightclubs and forcing them to adhere to specific local laws. If these various night establishments don't adhere, the community has the power to eventually close them down. I'm not quite sure these club owners are going to get much sympathy since Hamptonites have been held under a similar set of harsh laws for decades. If you aren't dressed a certain way, -with a specific looking group of people, prepped with the right promoter's name on the guest list, you aren't going to get the infamous colored band and don't even think about a VIP stamp. It's not going to happen. Point being, this whole Hampton nightlife has a specific "club etiquette" and if you aren't willing to play the game, you aren't going to get in. Getting into the club is an art form. It's a game most of us in our youth try to master.

The club game usually starts with a name. And you better be able to back that name up with a good story or be prepared to pay. The only thing that guarantees admittance is being on that VIP list. And the only thing better then being on the VIP list is making the list. Just ask Lizzie Grubman and Jonathan Cheban who are masterminds at making sure the place is packed with the "right" VIP crowd. This past weekend the Star Room's VIP list read as follows: Howard Stern, Beth Ostrosky, John Stamos, Jason Biggs, Linda Lopez and Chris Booker. Now even though Rebecca Romijn Stamos is no longer with John, she might have been a tad bit jealous to see him attached to an exotic brunette who shall remain nameless. While Jason Biggs was buried in a bevy of beauties, Howard Stern left early with girlfriend Beth after dining at 1770 with Linda Lopez and Chris Booker.

Dragonbar promoter Mike Heller made sure his VIP houseguest Cuba Gooding Jr. stopped by before heading over to end the night at Star Room. It was Cuba's first time in the Hamptons and it won't be his last.

Thanks to Noah Tepperburg, the VIP guest list at Jet East included Andre Harrell and stylist to the stars David Evangelista. Noah told me he has a new strategy this summer, "It's all about the seating, and making sure the right people are in the right places." Noah actually turned away a bachelorette party of thirteen girls and sent them over to Star Room just to "keep up a specific tone" at Jet East. Noah is thrilled to have the same twenty core people including Alex Von Furstenberg, pack his club every weekend. This Saturday, Jet East plans to throw the after party for the US Open, hoping to celebrate with some heavy hitters. When I asked Noah if we should expect to see Tiger Woods on the dance floor, he responded, "If he's going to go anywhere this weekend, I bet you it's here."

Until next week-Life is short! You only live once, party on!

Gina Glickman can be seen every Tuesday, Thursday and Sundays on News 12 Long Island's "What's Hot in the Hamptons."

dating rituals, such as attending baseball games (Broderick is a Mets fan), taking bike rides and eating at Barney Greengrass. They lived together for five years and then married in 1997. Broderick and Parker, both having been born of Jewish mothers, had their ceremony in an unassuming synagogue on the lower East side. Broderick's sister Janet, an Episcopalian minister, officiated. (His other sister is a psychotherapist.) Consistent with their desire to live their lives privately and quietly, their wedding was a low-key affair and not announced beforehand to the public.

On October 28, 2002, their first child, James Wilkie Broderick, was born at Lenox Hill

Hospital on the Upper East Side of Manhattan. Parker's pregnancy created a challenge for the producers (herself among them) of the highly original and tremendously popular "Sex and the City," in which Parker played a perennially single woman who drinks cosmopolitans and wears the latest fashions. Eventually, the season was split into two parts, so that Parker would not be filmed during the latest stages of her pregnancy, while in the earlier stages, her clothes were not quite as form fitting.

Although Parker is well known for her role in "Sex and the City," her career has been quite varied, as has Broderick's. Parker has had memorable roles in many movies, including Footloose, Steve Martin's offbeat L.A. Story, Timothy Burton's homage to B-movies, Ed Wood, The First Wives Club, and David Mamet's State and Main. On stage, she has appeared in Wendy Wasserstein's The Heidi Chronicles, The Innocents directed by Harold Pinter, A. R. Gurney's Sylvia (as a dog!), How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (starring Broderick) and Once Upon a Mattress. She has won three Golden Globe awards, a Screen Actor's Guild award and four Emmy nominations for her acting work in "Sex and the City". Coming next will be the movie version of Amy Sedaris's cult-hit Comedy Central television show, "Strangers with Candy". In 1997, she appeared in several episodes of the Israel version of "Sesame Street", called "Shalom Sesame".

Broderick is also well-known for acting in movies, including what may be his most famous and beloved film Ferris Bueller's Day Off. He also provided the voice of Simba in The Lion King and has appeared in a broad variety of films, including Lady Hawke, Glory, The Freshman with Marlon Brando, The Cable Guy, Election, You Can Count on Me and this summer's The Stepford Wives. But in New York City, Broderick is best loved for his brilliant performances on stage. He won Tony Awards for his roles in Neil Simon's Brighton Beach Memoirs and the musical How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (even though he had never sung or danced before taking the role), and critical and popular acclaim playing Leopold Bloom in Mel Brook's The Producers opposite Nathan Lane. While Lane's bravura performance of the flashier role was honored with the Tony Award, Broderick's subtle performance was equally responsible for the success of the show. As a child, Broderick used to listen to the album "2,000 Years with Carl Reiner & Mel Brooks", so his achievement in The Producers seems fitting.

As in the Hamptons, Broderick and Parker eschew the limelight in New York City, choosing to spend time with their family and close friends, including playwright Kenneth Lonergan, who wrote and received an Oscar nomination for You Can Count on Me. Although Broderick had not worked with Lonergan professionally before appearing in that film, the two have been close friends since they were students at Walden. Together, they play ping pong, one of Broderick's favorite pastimes

Parker — who was able to keep the Manolo Blahnik shoes she wore on "Sex in the City", but donated many of them to charity — is involved with the Hollywood Women's Political Committee and is National Ambassador for the U.S. Fund for UNICEF. Parker has said that she is not like "Sex and the City's" Carrie, as she was never comfortable sharing the intimate details of her relationships with girl friends. But she is happy to tell people that she and Broderick are completely devoted to one another. Her only complaint: Broderick "walks too slowly" and "never hails the cab". That makes them the classic New York City couple.

friends." So between this program that he began and his dreams for the future, Jeremy still finds time to be a kid. He credits his mother for being the organizational backbone and preventing him from getting too overwhelmed because, he says, "I had the idea but she did a lot to make it happen..."

What happens to this organization when it comes time for Jeremy to pursue his dream, perhaps up in Syracuse, NY? He said he plans to come back to help in the summers, but he hopes that some younger people will step up to keep the junior committee going in the years he'll be gone. He hopes that this fight continues to be fought. The program has grown exponentially since its first year in 2001, and he hopes that that trend will con-

He hopes people will see the importance of this kind of a program. One of the ways that the Children's Summer Lunch Program works to get funding is by sending letters to residents. He hopes that people don't just throw it out, but read it.

I asked him what the greatest thing he has learned from this whole experience has been. "There are people who are always worse off and you need to help them out. Don't look the other way."

Jeremy looks forward to two more summers here in the Hamptons as head of the junior committee of the program. Then a long road unfolds before him, and if he keeps clutching to the ideals that he's always held, he will make the world better for all those who cross his path.

I chose a nine iron, lined up, and hit it full, not with the rock at the end of the stick, but with the stick itself. This is a very rare thing to do. They call it a shank. It went sideways off the shaft of the club, out of bounds ninety degrees to my right. I looked at the shaft of the club. There was the white mark of the ball. Maybe twice, all that year, I had hit a shank. It is a rare and awful thing to do. I would now have a two shot penalty, retrieving my ball from out of bounds, throwing it over my shoulder and hitting it again. Just as my opponent would have a two shot penalty getting out of the brook. Well, I was still ahead.

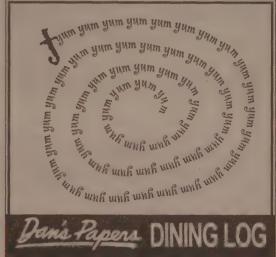

So I dribbled my next shot into the brook. I was just completely unnerved. Then I hit the ball over the green and the crowd, into the parking lot where it bounced around among the cars. My opponent hit his next shot back into the brook.

The long and short of this was that both of us wound up with fourteens. I still remember the ride home from this golf club, which was Baltusrol in Springfield, New Jersey, sitting in the back seat of the limo, none of my teammates even willing to talk to me, sobbing softly. We had tied for the conference champi-

And so, that is golf. Now, years later, I am playing again, and I play a round and there may be just one or two incredible shots that I had. And I remember them. I did everything right. The ball went 270 yards. I got into the cup not in four par, but in three, a birdie. This sweet memory carries me over to the next time I play. I never once think of the balls I have lost, the wandering around on the putting green in front of the clubhouse looking for a ball I sent off in some odd direction from a nearby fairway on the course. And I think of the herd of turkeys wandering around on the third hole, and the exercise and the good walk taken. Not ruined.

And that's golf.

Signature Holes

By Bob Ballot

Forget Pebble Beach, some of the most scenic holes in the U.S. are on this side of the Mississippi at courses which only rarely manage a televised glimpse. Here is a peek at some of the most dramatic — and most difficult — challenges awaiting the travelling golfer.

EAGLE RIDGE RESORT

(Galena, III.) Near the Illinois – Iowa border, this is a splendid vacation complex of rolling hills, sparkling lakes and three of the most spectacular golf courses in the country. If Galena strikes a distant chord in your mind, it is the birthplace of Ulysses S. Grant (and three other civil war generals, for that matter).

These days you'll want to bring plenty of ammo with you to the golf course, as Eagle Ridge's three layouts occupy hillsides of rugged beauty which are only occasionally interrupted by fairways and greens. Heidi would have trouble walking these courses.

The most recent addition to Eagle Ridge is "The General." With its vertiginous tee boxes, rolling fairways, horseshoe-shaped ponds and sweeping panoramic vistas of the farm country below, this exciting course throws more looks at you than a Meryl Streep film festival.

FRIPP ISLAND RESORT

(Fripp Island, S.C.) On a remote barrier island north of the conspicuous commercialism of Hilton Head, this pristine setting stood in for Vietnam during the filming of Forrest Gump. It also is host to Davis Love III's first golf course design.

His superb Ocean Creek layout works with the native landscape, often to dramatic effect, a refreshing departure from other more highprofile architects, who easily could have veered toward ostentation.

The par 4 eleventh is intimidating for two reasons. Firstly — and more innocently — water comes at you from the left and right. The cart path, in effect, divides the two lakes en route to the fairway. The real danger, however, arises on the far edge of the water hazard to the right, though not in the form of a bad lie, poor stance or plugged ball.

In the thrall of this challenging and beautiful course, we had long since forgotten the admonition delivered by the starter. And then . . . the splash. From across the fairway, I looked up to see what made such a noise, only to see my partner immediately beside that very spot. Any sun he had gotten during the round quickly drained from his face. He looked like he'd seen a ghost; or rather, thought he was on the verge of becoming one. No fish, turtle or frog, he quickly reasoned, displaces that much water when leaving the bank of a pond. After he collected his wits, only one mystery remained. Judging by its abrupt departure, we wondered if the alligator was now nervously telling his friends about the two-legged creature heading right at it with a long, glinting blade in his hands. Ironically enough, perhaps it was the gator that was convinced it would be the victim of a horrible slice!

SUGARLOAF GOLF CLUB

(Carrabassett Valley, ME.) Mountain golf at one of the nation's most exhilirating public courses. Perched high in the Bigelo Range and high on the map of Maine, Sugarloaf is not to be confused with the state's image of lobster boats, craggy coasts and precious art towns. The nearest airport is down in Portland, which might strike you as a southern city from these latitudes. In fact, the area is so remote, a wrong turn could easily land Quebec. in Sugarloaf plays along mountain ridges, astride birch forests and weaves around the incessantly babbling Carrabassett River.

The course is as tight as an Edith Wharton corset with scarcely a level lie. How difficult is it? From the championship tees, Sugarloaf has been assigned a slope rating of 151. For comparison purposes, the back tees at the Bethpage Black Course are rated 148.

For memorability, nothing in your experience is likely to compare with the opening two holes on the back nine. The sheer drama of these two holes is matched only by the sheer cliffs you must hit off to put your tee shots in play.

As you stand atop the par 4 10th, some skydiving experience might - and only might still your nerves. The foursome in front of you are ants! In winter nudge a golf ball off the edge and cause an avalanche. Your chances of hitting the fairway with your drive depend on your ability to hit the ball within five degrees or so of perfectly straight. If you manage to do this, the hole actually becomes quite short, since your ball gains extra yards while burning through the atmosphere on its way back to earth. The green, though, is smallish, shallow and protected in front by bunkers everywhere and in back by the rushing Carrabassett.

SAWMILL CREEK RESORT

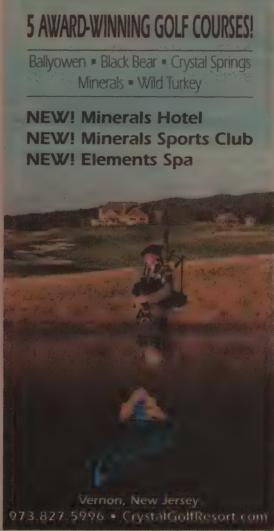

(Sandusky / Huron, Ohio) On the shores of Lake Erie, this is one of the midwest's finest golf resorts, with a championship course demanding excellence in all facets of the game and providing beautiful glimpses of the region's unheralded natural beauty.

The signature hole here is an awesome par 3. It is 188 yards from the upper tees to an even more elevated green. Your drive must travel over a pond, an ascending 20-foot embankment and another couple of feet of bulkheading. What's more, this all-or-nothing tee shot plays into prevailing westerly winds. Driver, certainly, and it must be hit on the screws.

AMELIA ISLAND PLANTATION

(Amelia Island, Fla.) Tucked in the northeast corner of the state on a barrier beach just across the St. John's River from Georgia, this golf resort's three layouts offer a combination of splendid coastal scenery and highly demanding shotmaking. These are the typical championship (wink-wink) courses found at many resorts. To enjoy yourself you must either be a serious golfer or a masochist. These courses have no interest in falsely flattering

Five incredible holes roll along on the tops of dunes, hard against the ocean. They are, however, anything but a day at the beach. At 347 yards, the par 4 fourth on the Ocean Links course is short but fraught with obstacles.

Its back tees are perched perilously close to the Atlantic's high tide markings. Out of bounds looms left and right, and a pair of palm trees show up quite uninvited, one of which is a few yards into the fairway. They can be played over, but prevent a clear view of a green which undulates so much, it appears to wobble.

Notable among the holes away from the ocean is the wondrous par 3 12th on Pete Dye's Oak Marsh course. The hole is 168 yards from the blue tees but never mind that. To your left is a panorama of wetlands and marsh grass so beautiful it qualifies as the maritime version of amber waves of grain. Par threes without island greens don't come any lovelier.

GOLDEN HORSESHOE GOLF RESORT (Williamsburg, Va.) Two fantastic courses. The Gold Course boasts as photogenic a collection of par threes as you'll find in the U.S. They all play spectacularly downhill over water from elevated tee boxes.

As spectacle, they are rivaled by the finishing hole at the resort's Green Course. Every shot on the Green is a mere prelude to the drive at the the epic 18th. 203 yards through the air your ball must travel or, quoth the ravine, "Nevermore." At the bottom is a scenic pond, backed by a sixty foot bank of sloping vegetation. With no drop area afforded, this hole can blow your round to smithereens. Clear the bank and it is gradually, but steadily uphill to an amphitheater green with the safety of the clubhouse just beyond.

authors Writing about The Hamptons

The following is an excerpt from the debut novel by Philip Galanes, entitled Father's Day. This scene depicts the main character, Matthew, recalling the simple memory of his father teaching him to drive. But in retrospect, he realizes the moment's profundity. Philip Galanes graduated from Yale University and Yale Law, and now lives in East Hampton and Manhattan. His novel is available on Amazon.com and in bookstores.

might sprout through to the other side if we drive over any kind of bump.

He's much too big for this car.

He has his hands folded neatly in his lap. but I can see the pressure of his fingers bearing down, see the skin beneath his fingertips pressed white. I can tell he'd like to wedge them up against the dashboard, create some small protection from being thrown through the windshield as I buck the car forward.

I'm sitting in the driver's seat.

Fifteen years old. Learning how to drive.

We're in a large field at the edge of Amagansett. It's very early on a bright Sunday morning in the fall.

Seatbelts hitched up tight.

I have a learner's permit already, so we could be practicing in the parking lot in town, but I know I'm not good enough for that yet. He would never say such a thing to me though, and I'm smart enough not to ask what we're doing out in the middle of a pasture at eight thirty on Sunday morning.

It's lovely here just the same. The entire field is surrounded by a ring of maples and sycamores and oaks, all at the red and yellow height of fall color, silvery aspens fluttering in the distance. I'm driving in large circles, trying to learn the syncopation of clutch and accelerator, releasing the one while pressing down the other.

It's a matter of timing, he says.

It's not coming easily to me.

"Smoother on the clutch," he says. "Let it up easier."

I try.

When I look over at my father, I see his cheeks are flushed. He doesn't raise his voice, but I can tell he's nervous from those ruddy

I try again.

We lurch forward this time, bucking to an abrupt halt. The back of the car feels like a whipped up bronco, furious and determined to kick its back legs up over its front. There's a bad grating sound too, the sound of innocent gears being stripped.

"Easier," he says. "Easy on the clutch."

I must have let it out too fast again.

When I let the clutch up slower though, pressing down on the accelerator too, we don't seem to move forward, not an inch. Just hear the revving of the engine, sitting stock still in the middle of this field.

I sneak another glance in my father's direction. Oh dear. See the red from his cheeks, like the fiery maples at the perimeter of this field, spreading to his ears now. I continue driving in a large loop. Something in me wants to move for the brake when I shift.

"No brake," he says. "You don't need the brake."

So I try some more.

As bad as I am though, the odd thing here is that I'm not at all worried about the accelerator or the clutch. Sooner or later, I'll get the knack for driving. I know that. I'll learn to leave the brake alone. What worries me is the silence in this car when he leaves off from his calm instructional phrases. When he's not telling me about the gas or the clutch, the brake, there's not a word to be heard inside this powder blue interior.

This is the problem I want to fix.

So I sit in the driver's seat, mangling the transmission of this poor little car, scripting questions that might start some kind of dia-

the eastbound traffic being rerouted down the shoulder. I walked more than two miles. Sharing the shoulder with the cars was pretty scary, let me tell you.

Anyway, the situation is they've got the Open very well organized, except for one thing. Nobody knows what anybody else is doing. There are security people, PGA people, local police and state police and, for all I know, the Patchogue Girl Scouts, and none of these groups has any coordination with any other. A mess.

That morning, before 9, a friend of mine spent 2 hours on County Road 39 between Hampton Bays and Southampton, in a solid traffic jam because, as the police told me confidentially, somebody had put the traffic cones up wrong to start the day.

The South Fork, east of the U.S. Open in Shinnecock, is a virtual ghost town at this point, with very little traffic on the roads. All the tie ups at Shinnecock are like a cork in a bottle. And getting there from the west is another mess, apparently. On the other hand, for those here in the east, well, we're sort of trapped. Stay home.

Or, take the Hampton Jitney, which runs a shuttle bus at all the bus stops between Montauk and Shinnecock. The shuttle bus runs almost on the hour from any of the regular Jitney stops and, as of Tuesday evening anyway, is not full because the Jitney knows what they are doing and they've got lots of buses for the job.

And unless I wind up on the cutting room floor, or whatever the equivalent of that is in the digital age, look for me as a "guest" on NBC on Saturday afternoon on your TV. The Open is pretty neat once you're in. It's like Yankee Stadium up there. And you can watch all the golfers up close and personal competing for $10 million in prize money.

"CASTLE UNDER SIEGE" Man's Plan To Spend $10 Million On His Home Goes Afoul Of The Village
Of Fathers

By Dan Rattiner

Because of the emotions that were running so high, Mr. Hattrick decided to keep last Thursday's meeting short and sweet.

"What I have here," he said, "is the Board's decision on the Barry Trupin application." Hattrick waved a thick document high in the air in front of him, and the eyes of the assembled crowd, including all the attorneys from all the interested parties, followed the arc of his arm.

"The decision is to REJECT the application for an additional zoning variance. I have nothing more to say. The board members have stated their thoughts within these sixteen pages. Therefore I advise the board members not to discuss this decision. Here is the decision. We will take no further questions."

Mr. Hattrick set copies of the document on a table, rose, and, with the rest of the board members, left Southampton Village Hall and the nervous buzzing of the crowd.

What was all this about? Was it someone's application to build a swimming pool where he was not supposed to? Was it a plan to build too close to the property line? A hardship case where a bedroom had to be squeezed in between a back hall and a garage? Certainly such problems, which are dealt with all the time by Southampton Village and all the other village and town fathers around here, could be handled in summary fashion, requiring a paragraph or two of explanation, or a hearing that might come about after a wait of a week.

In this case, however, the Village was dealing with an application for a fellow named Barry Trupin, an application which had been followed in the local press, in Newsday, and even in the New York Times.

"This is the biggest residential project ever undertaken in the New York area," Robert Rosenberg recently told a member of the press. These were words to be reckoned with, as Mr. Rosenberg is the field representative for the New York State Building Codes Bureau.

The Village officials had been watching this project evolve for the better part of three years. Located oceanfront on Meadow Lane where anyone who wanted to could drive by and see it under construction, the residence is already - which is part of the problem — over 42,000 square feet in size (about four times the size of the A & P), three and a half stories high, and bristling with spires and pinnacles, all built without a building permit, and all built well above the legal height limitations. Estimates are that before Barry Trupin gets done with it, his home will have cost in the neighborhood of ten million dollars, although these are just rough estimates considering the plans as they have evolved up until this time — which is another part of the problem. The plans keep changing.

And then, there is still another problem, perhaps the biggest problem of all.

"Who IS this Barry Trupin?" people in the community keep asking.

The wealthy section of Southampton, after all, consists of large numbers of summerpeople all of whom know one another and visit in each other's homes. There are cocktail parties, coming out (continued on next page) parties, birthday parties. There is a Southampton Social Set, up from Palm Beach and down from Newport, and as far as everyone is concerned, here's this fellow nobody has heard of building an estate — building it as a renovation of the old DuPont Estate for heaven sakes — that is larger than anything that has ever come before.

"It is a hideosity," one of the grand dames of Southampton society told the Village Board. "It is Southampton's Disneyland," another one said.

Certainly, everyone is welcome to their opinion on this house, which is being converted from a classic Georgian design — as the DuPonts originally built it — into a full scale replica of a French Gothic Chateau. However, none of these opinions would have come to the attention of the Village Board if were not for the fact that Mr. Trupin has gone ahead and rebuilt the old DuPont Estate with total disregard for any of the local rules and regulations.

Last Wednesday, on an afternoon when the fog was rolling in from the sea, I went down Meadow Lane to view this so called "hideosity," or "Disneyland." What I found, instead, was a huge, joyful, French castle, still under construction, that seemed much in keeping with all the wealthy summer homes around it. There was, nearby, a summerhome designed in the mode of an English thatched roof house. There was a summerhome in the shape of a glass cylinder, obviously striving for recognition from the American Institute of Architects, there was an old halftimber English restoration nearby, a modern glass box. There was nothing much better than the Trupin mansion and certainly there were lots worse.

Around the Trupin mansion, however, at the corners of the 6.2-acre estate, there stood twenty four hour guards complete with little guard houses to keep people away. There were chain link fences. Warning signs. Certainly nothing that would indicate to the neighbors they might be

"Who is this Barry Trupin?"

Mr. Trupin is in his forties, is of medium height with dark hair and a solid build, and he dresses like any typical person in Southampton. According to those who have met him, he is a perfectly pleasant man and will be a credit to the town and village when all of this construction is over with. Along with his wife, he frequently shops on Main Street and Jobs Lane in town, but he is simply so unobtrusive that people just never notice who he really is.

Mr. Trupin's father Bennett W. Trupin, is a Silverware Designer and Consultant who now maintains an office in Hallendale, Florida. He is, according to those who have met him, a "real gentleman," and, at this point, perhaps the foremost authority on Pelletreau silver in the world today. He is writing a book about it. Elias Pelletrau, for those not familiar with him, was a brilliant silversmith who lived in Southampton in the 1600's whose work today is both treasured in museums and worth a small fortune to collectors. The Pelletrau silversmith shop still stands, right on Main Street.

The junior Mr. Trupin, the man who all the fuss is about today, earned a Bachelor of Science in Applied Physics from Hofstra, worked on top secret projects for the United Nuclear Corporation in the 1960's, was involved with the Charlie Bates Saloon, a restaurant in New York City which failed in the late 1960's, and is, today, an officer in Rothchild Reserve International, Inc., with headquarters on East 96 Street. RRI, as it is known, is a private investment banking consulting firm, and has subsidiaries in computer leasing, real estate and insurance.

Other things people might like to know about Mr. Trupin: he is divorced and remarried, he has a home on Central Park South (his phone is listed), and in addition to the DuPont Mansion he is remodeling, or is trying to remodel, he owns a large yacht which is fully staffed year-round, three Rolls Royces (one with the license plate TRUP) and the house ADJACENT to the DuPont Mansion, formerly owned by a wild and crazy theatrical type named Roy Radin, who was killed by a bullet in the head and his body found in a canyon outside of Los Angeles last year.

Certainly, everyone is entitled to their privacy, and I regret that I have to pry. But there are ways of having privacy and ways of having privacy. Certainly having guards on your estate and avoiding all contact whatsoever with any member of the press, or even failing to show up at the Village Hall hearings (he sends surrogates), doesn't help any. Everyone would like to know even a little bit about a man who is building the largest single private residence ever constructed in the metropolitan area.

Mr. Trupin's purchase of the DuPont estate came in 1979, at an auction, which this reporter attended. The price which it went for — $700,000

— made me think that I might have put in a bid of my own to take it, so startlingly low was the

What Mr. Trupin got at that time (he was not in attendance as I recall) was six acres of oceanfront, a 30,000 square foot mansion with approximately 62 rooms, and, so everyone thought, a welcome into Southampton society.

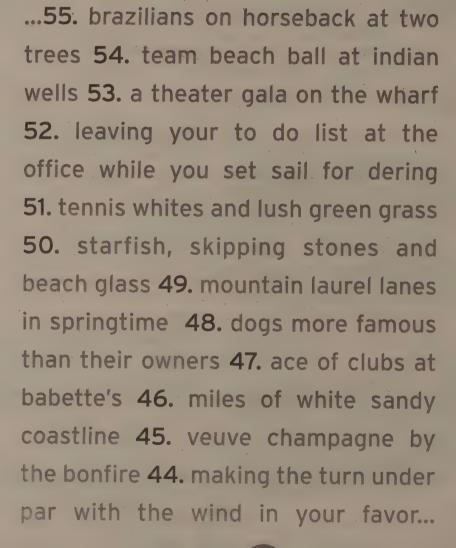

According to all the official records, the only application made for any sort of building permit by Mr. Trupin, was in 1980 for a modest kitchen renovation budgeted at $15,000. Since that time, for the next three years, renovations and construction continued on the project without any further paperwork going to the Village as required.

Walls were knocked down, roofs raised, another 12,000 square feet added, the kitchen alone was remodeled and moved around six different

An explanation for this, by the architects and designers on the site - there is a full time year around civil engineer there — is that all this confusion and moving around of the construction is necessary in order to use the "fast track" method of construction which will get the thing built as quickly as possible. (Four years?) Plans which might be submitted — and within the past year plans were finally submitted — became obsolete overnight as new changes were made. The French Chateau was "evolving." They'd build it first and get the required permits later.

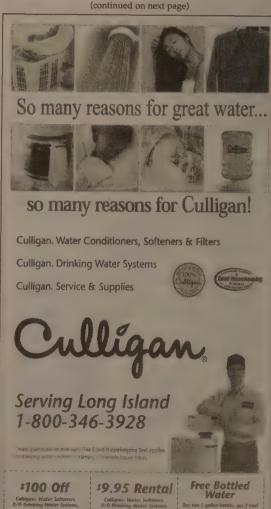

A look at a set of plans, dated April, 1984, which are on file at the Village Building Department, show a remarkably intelligent idea logue between us.

"When did you learn to drive?" I think. Or maybe: "Who taught you to drive?"

My eyes peeled on the grassy path our car has made in the field, trying to trace it again this third time around. My foot steady on the accelerator, hoping against hope that I might find the right question – the perfect one, the one that lets the clutch up easy, sends just the right amount of gas to the engine, purring beneath the powder blue hood.

"Was it easy for you to learn?" I ask.

He answers all my questions, of course, every single one.

"My father taught me," he says. Or "I was about your age."

He's never rude.

But none of them open onto anything larger than their specific one- or two-word answers. They're all like little dead-end roads. I can't seem to locate anything like an open field here.

The questions aren't very original, I suppose. I hardly care what his answers are. I just want to bridge the gulf between the two bucket seats.

My father wants me to pay closer attention to the clutch.

This week, playwright James L. Larocca will lead a reading of his new play, 44 Sunset Park. Set in Brooklyn in the 1930s, this new play tells the story of a seventeen-year-old girl at the center of a troubled Irish-Catholic family during the Great Depression. It is a story of struggle, hope and survival. James L. Larocca is the author of the award-winning Penang, which was presented in a special staged reading at Guild Hall in 2003. for the renovation of this old house. Gone are the 62 rooms and the 35 bedrooms. In their stead are about 40 great big rooms. There is a huge "entertainment hall," a solarium, a media room and an aquarium where it is possible, believe it or not, to skin-dive. There is a library with a second story balcony all around, a master bedroom suite upstairs (with heated towel racks in the bathrooms) and then, up still another flight into a private turret, a suite of private offices overlooking it all. What a great place to live! Critics of the Chateau — I really think it ought to be called a castle point to something on the plans called the "Normandy Pub," and the "Muhammad's Alley," as being out of keeping with the area.

A closer look, however, shows that these are just exuberant names for fancifully furnished rooms that might appear in any rich person's house. The "Normandy Pub," is off the dining room and has a large bar, and is clearly just an interesting sort of den. "Muhammad's Alley," forgetting the pun with the former heavyweight boxing champion, is just a long hallway which seems, by the looks of it, to be a place for tapestries, paintings and statuary.

Still, there ain't no getting around the fact that it is a very big house, and one which, by its very size, will attract national attention when and if it is ever completed.

The Village, by denying the application to allow a roof 60 feet high instead of 45 feet high is. in the opinion of many, cutting off its nose to spite its face. There has been, until now, almost five million dollars spent on these renovations, almost all of which has gone to electricians and carpenters in the area. There will be another five million needed to finish the place, although, like the estimates for the Nuclear Power Plant of Shoreham, this figure could go up and up.

But how could the Village fathers do anything else but what they did? The mansion has been under construction three years without a permit, it violates a variety of zoning limitations. Certainly the fact that the Mayor of the Village, Roy Wines, own the plumbing firm that is doing the plumbing contracting on the place, does not help either. Mr. Wines acknowledges that his plumbing bill, just for the year of 1983, exceeded a quarter of a million dollars.

What will happen now is really up to Mr. Trupin. Having been stung, he can take his yachts and his Rolls Royces and his entourage and go off somewhere else. Or he can send his lawyers into court for an appeal.

As of this writing, there is no indication which of the two options he will take. One imagines that he will either sit in Roy Radin's old house a mere 50 room mansion — or go up to the partially completed office complex high up in one of the turrets and just think about things for awhile.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander #303

Paardon me, do you have any Gray Poupon?

East End Hospice is hosting a silent auction charity event at Paard Hill Farms on ShelterIsland Saturday, June 19 from 5 to 8 pm. The cost is $60 a ticket, call Christine at 288-7080. If you can possibly afford it, this will be worth every penny. Let me explain why...

My friend Carolyn Denning is one of the committee co-chairs and she tuned me on to this event because she knows I love art and two of my favorite island artists' paintings will be among the auctions. One is Olive Reich, who should be on the cover of Dan's Papers about four times a year, in my humble opinion. Actually, Carolyn and Olive are two women I try to avoid whenever possible. They are both thin, beautiful, intelligent and charming - a quadruple threat! And they both live in homes that show their impeccable good taste and I oughta know because my taste is the polar opposite, so I guess I have peccable taste...I peccked up a little here and I peccked up a little there. For example, I have a complete service for eight of the finest mismatched china the Island can offer.

I'm not sure if the owners of Paard Hill Farms, Ellen Lear and Pieter Ruig, have peccable or impeccable taste. The gigantic white horse barn that can store a zeppelin looks impeccable from the road... but the copper top Russian-style onion domes (which I love) that reflect enough sunlight to be seen from space, might be considered garish by some, which puts the domes in the peccable zone. [I've met Pieter ,a real regular guy who drives a pick-up truck, so I suspect he is the one with the peccable taste.] I will have to conduct a thorough inspection of the premises to know where it falls on the peccable-impeccable continuum of taste.

There will be over 36 items auctioned, including a vacation at a farmhouse in Tuscany (may it please G-d I should win), jewelry, sculpture, John Pagliaro pottery, antiques, art by Olive Reich, Richard Denning (my other island favorite), Nidra D'Alessandro and others, an "aerial jaunt", massages, and the best of all – a ride to the airport!

I'm sorry, but a ride to JFK is the best item. It's the one thing you need so much when you need it and is nearly impossible to get! The only people who take you to the airport are people who either love you so much they want to be with you every extra minute they can be, or hate you so much they want to make damn sure you leave, or people who charge you a dollar for every foot the car moves!

The owners of Paard Hill have just a few basic requests if you come to the party.

- 1. No hide and go seek on the grounds they are still looking for three guests from the last party.
- 2. No getting the horses drunk.
- 3. No climbing to the copper domes and yelling at people on the ground below.
 - 4. No falling off the barn if you got to the domes in the first place.

- 5. No filming for Reality TV shows!
- 6. These are not eBay auctions, do not attempt to bid at the last nanosecond.
 - 7. No feeding the caviar to the cats.

I don't understand the 'no feeding the caviar to the cats' rule. Certainly cats are smart enough not to eat that awful stuff. I had caviar once, it tastes like a mouthful of thick, supersalty oil. Someone told me it was an acquired taste. If I want to acquire a taste for something that tastes that bad, I'll start by acquiring a taste for liver, then I'll advance to motor oil with whipped anchovies, then caviar.

8. If your name is Sally Flynn, you will be searched for our good china and silver before you leave the premises.

Maybe it's my imagination, but I think that rule makes me feel paranoid for no good reason. Why, almost every nice home I've ever been in is missing a few pieces of china; it breaks, it gets stored and you forgot where you put it, it gets lost in my purse....it's the China Syndrome, happens to everybody.

It will be a great evening for a great cause. Ellen and Pieter are terrific to open their beautiful estate to East End Hospice for this event. With any luck, they can be duped, conned, eajoled, blackmailed, sweet talked, railroaded-approached to offer their lovely home for other worthy causes.

I wonder if they have any Wedgwood in the Harlequin pattern...

HEART OF THE HAMPTONS

The American Heart Association's 8th Annual Gala, under the tents at the Siena Spirituality Center in Water Mill, honored Publisher Dan Rattiner with the Humanitarian With A Heart Award, John Tortorella with the Distinguished Leadership Award, and Peter Bruno, M.D. with the Distinguished Service Award. Many of those in attendance wore red to the gala in recognition of the new campaign, "Go Red for Women," intended to raise awareness that heart disease is the #1 killer of women. After a lavish dinner catered by Starr Boggs, guests danced to the Trevor Davison Orchestra and bid on a collection of fabulous donated items, including a beautiful 18kt necklace and earring set donated by award-winning designer Marya Dabrowski and Rose Jewelers. Wines autographed by Alec Baldwin, Paris Hilton, Billy Joel, Chuck Scarborough, Roy Scheider, Kathleen Turner, Kurt Vonnegut were won in a spirited auction.

Zivo: It's All About the Journey

Greenport Writer's Novel Recounts Youthful Hitchhiking Adventure

By Loraine Page

Running away from home has its good points and its bad points. Both are described vividly in Zivo, a self-published novel by Greenport resident Gene Rackovitch.

The main character of the book is Zivo, a 14-yearold boy of Serbian heritage, who is actually Rackovitch, but with a few fictional embellishments. The plot centers around Zivo and his Italian friend Pete, both from Queens, who hop aboard a ferry to

New Jersey one day in 1939 and, in the blink of an eye, decide they're not going

The boys embark on an adventure that takes them as far south as Florida, with some blessings and many mishaps occurring along the way. They never really get the urge to go back to their parents' rule. Zivo, especially, doesn't want to return to the beatings routinely dealt out by his authoritarian father.

Primarily, though, the boys set out on their hitchhiking expedition because they fervently believe in adventure, having been influenced by an older neighborhood boy, "the local runaway hero," who used to leave home frequently and then return to talk about it.

"We were awakened to true adventure by a guy named Mario Hunsberger," writes Rackovitch in the prologue. "He told stories of being a seaman on the boats in the Great Lakes...hobo jungles, riding the rails, working the wheat fields of the Midwest, and picking berries and peaches in Georgia. All of this ignited a fire in most of us, which proved hard to extinguish." The writing alternates between narrative and stream-of-consciousness, where we get inside Zivo's thoughts. Somehow Rackovitch, a former Marine, milk truck driver, and jewelry salesman, manages to keep the suspense going until the last page. When asked how he learned to write a cohesive, booklength story, Rackovitch said a lot of reading helped and that John Steinbeck's novels were an inspira-

"I don't believe you can truly be a good writer unless you have lived what you have written," he says, claiming that about 75 percent of the novel is autobiographical.

As the two boys slowly make their way south, they become recipients of occasional kindnesses by people they come in contact with. For instance, one landlady gave the penniless boys meals and a room for an entire week on credit, trusting that they would pay when they got their first paychecks. In another instance, while the boys were working as dishwashers in Washington DC, the restaurant owner and his wife tenderly offered to adopt Zivo much to his surprise. It was one of several revelations during the trip in which he realized he was a likeable person.

But the hard times outweighed the good. The boys met strange and scary characters through the process of hitching rides. Most often they were picked up by long-distance truck drivers who needed the company to stay awake, but this was no guarantee they were in good company.

The boys were hungry more often than not, they were shot at for sleeping on private property, and in one memorable scene, they came face to face with filthy accommodations at a Salvation Army post, manned by a peculiar host. On this occasion, their thrill at finding shelter faded fast when they couldn't sleep because bed bugs were eating their flesh. Zivo, frantic with discomfort, exclaims, "Off you lousy bastards. Oh, dirty bastards. ENOUGH!"

Out of adversity comes life wisdom, and Rackovitch writes of this. The manager of a YMCA in South Carolina allows the boys to use the facilities to bathe, something they had not done in many weeks. Zivo allows us to see his thoughts while washing, a simple activity that he realizes takes on new meaning when a human has been deprived of it for a long time.

"Stick your head in, wash your hair, use a lot of soap," he writes. "Oh boy, that feels good. Oh boy, nice spray, just right...

Zivo acquires a road savvy and admires his newfound skill. "Quick glimpses of life," he ruminates. "People's reactions to you. All make it interesting. You gain from the contact. You have to know when to move, make a quick exit." At one point, when he muses that "danger is in the tough spots" and "beauty is in the easy places," he recognizes his budding awareness and says to himself, with a trace of sarcasm, "Ain't you the intellectual?"

Rackovitch has received favorable comments about his book from friends and relatives. He sees irony in this because he was never considered to be intellectual. He says he did poorly in academic subjects, especially English. He admits to one strength,

North Fork Art Event Of The Week "A Moment In Time" Opens At Martha Clara Vineyards

"A Moment in Time," an elegant exhibit of fine oil paintings by artist Joanne Von Zwehl, will open with a reception on Saturday, June 19, from 6-9 p.m., in Gallery One at Martha Clara Vineyards on Sound Avenue in Jamesport.

Von Zwehl has been producing original artwork since childhood, when she won her first award at the Port Washington Public Library at the age of twelve. She has exhibited in over thirty solo showings, as well as numerous group shows, and has traveled the world, stopping in Ireland, France and Vietnam to study art and gather sources of inspiration. A large portion of her work currently resides in private collections. With each painting, Joanne endeavors to tell a story, at the same time allowing the viewer to create his or her own script.

The gallery is open Saturday and Sunday from 11-6, and during the week by appointment. Call 298-0075,

Coming up: the Hemingway African Gallery of Manhattan, the largest and oldest established importer of fine African collectables, returns to Martha Clara with a reception on June 26 in Gallery Two. get some of his short stories published. His innate writing ability is evident in Zivo. Early in the book, this is how he describes the ferry ride that initiates the boys' adventure: "The churning of the ferry sent vibrations through the deck, teasing the bottom of our feet. It was a giant turtle moving ever so slowly across the water."

That's a descriptive passage that Rackovitch could be proud of in English class.

Dan's North Fork

The Bayview Inn & Restaurant

South Jamesport Avenue, Jamesport

722-2659

The Bayview Restaurant is housed in a charming inn that dates back to the 1840s. Over the intervening years between then and now, the inn served as a rooming house before becoming a hotel at a time when this charming part of the North Fork was a tourist Mecca boasting a number of large, stately hotels. Sadly, time and public demand for modern facilities took its toll on most of these beautiful structures. Some burned down, some were bulldozed. And the Bayview settled into a state of rundown shabbiness until Bob and Pat Patchell, owners of the Inn on the Bay Motel just down the road, bought it a few years ago. The pair spent two years totally gutting and rebuilding it, and the final result emphasizes the inherent charm of the building.

This result is a great credit to all concerned. You feel at home from the time you walk in and receive a warm Irish welcome from the Patchells and their sons, Scott and Gregory, who now own and manage the inn.

When it came to the restaurant Bob and Pat had definite ideas.

"We wanted to employ the best chef we could find, make sure he could cope with a busy restaurant, and then leave it to him," Bob explained. Chef Tom Lopez came to Bayview after having had his training at Johnson and Wales before working in the kitchens of Il Toscano in Douglaston Manor, La Marmite in Williston Park and the Bayport House. He is full of enthusiasm for his role at the Bayview Inn and categorizes his cuisine as an eclectic mix of American and Continental with some oriental overtones.

Tom agreed to provide a tasting menu so that we could experience a wide range of the dishes and we started with his special spring rolls, which came with a great spicy dipping sauce. They were incredibly light and crisp and filled with succulent pieces of shrimp. Avocado stuffed with crabmeat redolent of cilantro and drizzled with a slightly sharp rice wine vinegar was clean and fresh, and enormous baked New Zealand mussels filled with spinach and lobster meat promised an intriguing blend of tastes that proved to work in practice. By this time we realized that this was going to be a fun evening of great food. Finally from the appetizers we tasted chopped Asian spiced tuna tartare served with scallions and wasabi on a toasted wanton skin. From all of these it would be difficult to select a favorite as they were all so enticing.

Then came some breast of duck cooked in an Asian style with honey and Thai pepper glaze and lemongrass. This absolutely melted in the mouth with a lovely blend of sweet and slightly peppery overtones perfectly balanced and leaving a long finish like a great wine.

From the fish dishes we tasted macadamia nutcrusted Sea Bass that was to die for. Interestingly Tom plates this with a spicy coulis, which he explained is there for those who want some extra zing to the dish, or it can be left as décor if you want your fish au natural.

Short ribs should fall off the bone and the ones we had literally did. The meat was deep and rich in taste and hoisin sauce added to the complexity. This is a really great dish for carnivores.

Desserts are prepared by Bob and Pat's daughter-in-law, Gayle, and they were totally up to the standard of Tom's dishes. The coconut creme brulee was superb as were the raspberry sorbet with berries and espresso with which we closed a meal to remember for a long while.

Melanie, who looked after our table, was as good as the food. She was really knowledgeable about the dishes and preparation and her vivacity and enthusiasm were fully in keeping with the ambience of the restaurant.

The wine list is excellent both in choice and price. Long Island wines are well represented, with a special blend by Lenz Winery serving as both the house red and white for The Bayview Inn. There are many good wines at under $30 a bottle and a good selection of wines by the glass.

Tom changes his menu regularly and there are always daily specials. The restaurant is open for lunch and dinner year-round and is ideally designed for medium-sized private parties. There is also a wonderfully comfortable bar that is as close to a pub as you may find this side of the ocean.

The hard work and foresight of the Patchell family has resulted in a charming inn and restaurant rising from a rundown wreck. Tom Lopez, based on our visit, ranks among the top tier of chefs on Long Island and this is a restaurant which, although tucked away at the end of the road by the bay, is one which all who really love to eat well should put on their "must visit" list.

Big Event of the Week

Opera Of The Hamptons' Tosca at Borghese Vineyards Saturday, June 19, Cutchogue

This Saturday, June 19, marks the return of Opera of the Hamptons to the North Fork at Castello di Borghese winery in Cutuchogue when one of the most famous and favorite operas of all time, Puccini's Tosca, will be performed by an international cast of singers.

After writing La Boheme (which the company will also perform later in the year at the Vail-Leavitt Music Hall in Riverhead), Puccini saw Sardou's drama performed on stage and immediately envisioned an operatic version. Set in Rome, the timeline covers just one day in June of 1800 as news reaches the city of the changing fortunes of the French army, led by Napoleon and the Austrian army, as they fight a major battle at Marengo. Cavaradossi, a painter and a key role in the story, will be sung by Derrick Alton, making his debut with the company. Cavaradossi is in love with Floria Tosca, who is a beautiful singer besides being a very jealous and passionate woman. Floria Tosca is regarded as one of the top female operatic roles and will, in my mind, always be linked with Maria Callas. Rosa D'Imperio, who will sing Tosca in this production, has a wide international resume, including singing this role with the Opera de Puerto Rico.

The villain of the opera is without doubt the Baron Scarpia, the chief of the secret police, and Steven Fredericks will bring his strong bass-baritone voice and presence to this role as Scarpia plots to seduce Tosca and torture Cavaradossi to reveal where Angelotti, a fugitive from justice, is hiding.

All goes wrong for almost everyone. Scarpia is stabbed to death by Tosca as she fights off his

Rosa D'Imperio, who will sing the role of Tosca advances. Poor Cavaradossi thinks he is going to escape by facing a mock execution with dummy bullets – surprise surprise! Tosca avoids arrest for Scarpia's death by jumping to her death. In other words, about par for the course for many grand operas, but there is a not so subtle difference between the fated lovers of Boheme, who are separated by the ravages of illness, and Tosca and Cavaradossi, who are the victims of human passions played out between a number of couples, with undertones of deceit, doubt and jealousy.

For some reason, Tosca is one of the operas that has generated a wealth of anecdotes and folklore. One of the best involves Maria Callas and was related by the famous tenor Tito Gobbi. According to the story, Callas came too near the candles and set her wig ablaze. Gobbi relates that he jumped on her and smothered the flames and that she whispered, "Thank you Tito," as she went on to calmly stab him to death. Another story has Tosca bouncing up and down into sight after supposedly leaping to her death because, in the name of safety, a trampoline, rather than a mattress, had been strategically placed to break her fall. Strictly factual though was the ill-fated production in Italy where the tenor playing Cavaradossi was actually wounded in the leg and taken to hospital for surgery because the blanks had too much powder in them!

Hopefully no such mishaps will occur this coming Saturday, but patrons are certain to get their fill of great music and singing as the indefatigable Atarah Hazzan, Opera of the Hamptons music director, will provide her usual splendid accompaniment, this time on a Steinway grand piano, specially donated by Steinway for this performance.

Finally, anyone who enjoyed the recent recital of Riverhead's Ishan Arvell Johnson, at the Vail-Leavitt, will be thrilled to see him debut with the company in the role of the gendarme, Sciarrone. Tickets are available by calling 631-728-8804.

Dine at our beautiful location with panoramic golf course views.

From the NY Times, Mrs. JoAnne Starkey says: "Mr. Guy Peuch's crab cakes are legendary, perhaps the best on Long Island."

From Newsday, Mr. Peter Gianotti says:

"It's easily the most impressive restauant to open in Riverhead since potatoes began giving way to grapes! Excellent main course; pork chop finishes with nubbins of garlic and sage. Also first rate, the Niman Ranch dry-rubbed rib steak. Top desserts: lemon tart, tart tatin and chocolate-hazelnut puck."

From Dan's Papers, Mr. Roy Bradbrook says:

"Probably the best lobster bisque we have ever tasted; pate with pistachio and truffles was superb, vibrant duck a l'orange with some incredible wild rice, impressive desserts. Guy Feuch is among the very top tier chefs in this region."

The "Best Of The Best" Of Our Dining Destinations

What's Cookin'

'Tis the time of year when we anxiously start scouting out our favorite farmstands for signs of summer. Horseradish, asparagus, and rhubarb herald the season as strawberries, arugula, and lettuces follow on their heels.

While this process never fails to excite even dormant culinary instincts, perhaps those who get the most inspired are our local chefs. After a long winter hoping for freshness to arrive from around the globe, these masters of the range look ravenously forward to slicing and dicing the best the East End has to offer. And while the lushness of our mid-summer is indeed incomparable, it's always the sweet beginning that stirs us most.

La Plage. A glowing beacon along the Sound coast for sophisticated diners. The stellar reputation of chef / proprietor Wayne Wadington derives from cutting-edge combinations of difficult-to-secure ingredients. His creations fly off the menu as quickly as off the plate, but if you have the chance try the lightly seared scallops with blue crab mille feuille in a kaffir lime / sweet pea sauce or yellow fin tuna paired with chorizo sausage and butternut squash. Desserts range from decadent (chocolate cake with an espresso mousse) to delicate (Tahitian vanilla crème brulee.). All are mind boggling. Top wine list, too. Entrees $22-33. 131 Creek Road, Wading River. 744-9200. (Bradbrook, 2/04). [Ap,Ch]

Modern Snack Bar. Home-cooked meals away from home await you at this charming family-run restaurant operating since 1950. Wittmeier brothers' time-honored menu contains dishes too good to go out of style. Delectable sauerbraten is perfectly tender and the stuffed cabbage very good. Duck breast salad, recently introduced, is another winner. Crab cakes and lobster salad are real treats, but the big surprise is the world-class shrimp and crabmeat quiche. Home-baked desserts are splendid and their take-out pie business is brisk. Wines are mostly limited to local vintages. Reservations not needed, but day or night, it's always a crowded house. Entrees, $9-$17. Rt. 25 Aquebogue. 722-3655. (Bradbrook, 10/4/02). [T]

Red Door. A quintessentially North Fork restaurant: Manhattan-caliber cuisine paired with an ambience of low-key charm. The Mediterranean-influenced American regional menu always offers a panoply of pastas as well as meat and fish dishes. Perhaps their winningest recipe occurred by accident. Ask genial chef /owner Stephen Mazzella for the story behind his remarkable porterhouse pork chop with honey, capers and cayenne. A true instance of luck being the residue of design! Dessert lovers have their vocabulary stretched by such wonders as raspberry crème brulee and Godiva chocolate cake with Tahitian vanilla bean ice cream. Ample wine list. Entrees – $16-$28. 13560 Main Rd., Mattituck. 298-4800. (Trueman-Honey, 12/03). [D]

The Shady Lady Restaurant. The Zorn family's vision of stately elegance comes to the North Fork in this grandly unique dining room. Two rooms actually, with dinner jackets de rigueur in the Scarlet Room and a more casual ambience pervading the lodge-like Pine Room. The menu keeps apace with the opulence of the surroundings. Chef Ross Essner's cosmopolitan cooking style is globally savvy, but local-ingredient particular. Especially breathtaking is the lobster risotto with diver scallop and asparagus. A superb cheese plate complements the dessert choices and the wines are as excellently-chosen as they are reasonably-priced. 305 North Road, Greenport. 477-4500. Entrees, $28-$38. (Bradbrook, 7/18/03). {A,Cu,Ser,Spe,W}

Stonewall's. Haute cuisine in a tranquil setting, at the Woods Course at Cherry Creek in Riverhead. Step into the warm and inviting dining room, however, and your thoughts will happily shift from golf course to main course. Many superb entrees, including the delicate halibut in a mustard-nut crust, are worth savoring long after the meal has concluded. Duck a l'orange on a bed of wild rice is another standout as is the deeply flavorful lobster bisque. Rigatoni with roasted tomatoes, mozzarella, capers and olives is exquisitely al dente. Fine wines and creatively fruity desserts complete a dining experience par excellence. Entrees $15-$27. 967 Reeves Ave., Riverhead. 506-0777. (Bradbrook, 9/12/03).(Lu,N)

Touch of Venice. Top-notch Italian cuisine in a delightful setting on Mattituck Inlet. Named appropriately for location, cuisine and a large mural dominating the dining room, this is family dining par excellence with a sophisticated ambience. Among the kitchen's highlights: Orient Point oysters, chilled but not icy; baby spinach salad with gorgonzola; black angus porterhouse. Manicotti in a fresh, simple tomato sauce is among the many pleasing pasta dishes. Lobster Meat over angel hair pasta, a frequent special, is an exciting dish of imaginative complexity and one of the North Fork's perennial favorites. Cold seafood bruschetta is another special to watch for. Entrees $16-$34. Wickham Avenue at Matt-A-Mar Marina, Mattituck. 298-5851. (Bradbrook, 8/16/02). [L,O]

Tuscan House. Your table is yours for the evening at this elegant, upscale Italian. Authentic, classical dishes bear the deft touch of chef William Oster. His fish is exceptionally fresh and his osso bucco masterly. But his virtuosity lies in the care with which he pairs his 16 pastas and his sublime sauces. The results range from delicate to intense. Pappardelle with a puree of beans dressed with soppresata, fresh chilies, garlic and parmigiano reggiano is typically adventurous and winning. The dessert tray is filled with excellent choices. Well-chosen wines, emphasis on regional Italians. 673 Osborn Ave., Riverhead. 727-2330. (Bradbrook, 9/7/01). [C,I,P]

Tweed's. Owner Ed Tuccio parlayed his interests in history, Americana and the bison to create this unique eatery. The décor puts one in mind of an expensive turn-of-the-century men's club, but with a romantic twist. Notable appetizers include Oysters Portland, enveloped in sautéed leeks and crisp bacon, and the Bistro Salad, redolent of blue cheese and roasted beets. Aside from Tweed's excellent specialty of the house, succulent farm-raised bison, also recommended are the Sashimi Sesame Tuna, carb-free vegetable lasagna, and Duck Two Ways. Don't skip dessert: the pastry chef is a graduate of the Cordon Bleu in London. Entrees $19-26. 17 E. Main St., Riverhead. 208-3151. (Trueman-Honey, 7/04/03). [St].

ART COMMENTARY By Marion Wolberg Weiss

JACK LENOR LARSEN AT THE MUSEUM OF ARTS AND DESIGN

There are no peaceful ponds or terraced planted flowers. No serene places to meditate, or majestic sculptures to ponder. No lush gardens or gentle breezes. Simply put, it's not the Longhouse Reserve, East Hampton's world of its own and home to Jack Lenor Larsen, an authentic Renaissance Man.

Instead, it's The Museum of Arts and Design, smack in the middle of Manhattan's art-conscious 53rd Street. It's not an oasis no matter how you imagine it. Concrete and congestion: the usual descriptive labels signifying an urban rather than a country setting.

Even so, the museum's current craft exhibit of Mr. Larsen's collection and creations conjures up the Longhouse Reserve despite itself. This observation says mountains about the works on display and their sublime arrangement. When you can take aesthetic endeavors from their natural environment and put them someplace else, integrity intact, that's impressive. Such a phenomenon also just happens to be a goal of this exhibit, albeit an understated one: evoking the spirit of Longhouse Reserve and its artistic holdings.

The graceful quality of both Longhouse Reserve and the Museum's wandering, suspended-like staircase creates an initial sensibility: tranquility and spaciousness. Such an atmosphere benefits an altered state of consciousness, which is no easy feat considering the preoccupations we have just deposited on New York's proverbial "mean streets."

Mr. Larsen's works deriving from his collection perpetuate the ambience of light and translucency and thus contribute to the overall sensibility. Dale Chihuly's three-tiered glass bowl possesses a circular configuration which reinforces the spatial peacefulness. (His spouted vessels do not, but they are arresting and playful, nonetheless.) Michiko Uehara's silk scarf conveys a sense of space and rhythm as well.

"Hills of Home"

Mr. Larsen's own designs are no less

Mr. Larsen's own designs are no less evocative. His Klimt-inspired "Primavera" recreates the colors of Longhouse as it comes to life after a long winter: tranquil and energized simultaneously. His "Hills of Home" recalls the reflection of water so prevelent in the Hamptons' country setting. The analogous hues (like ochre and orange) are muted, unlike "Primavera," imbuing the abstract landscape with a meditative state.

We can't stop looking at the work, nor can we bear to leave the Museum's setting. But we must, carrying with us the grandeur and peace of Mr. Larsen's endeavors.

"Jack Lenor Larsen: Creator and Collector" is on view at New York's Museum of Arts and Design (40W. 53 St.) until Aug. 29.

Honoring the Artist: Adam Smith

While we've all heard the popular expression, "No man is an island," this week's cover artist, Adam Smith, fits such a phrase to a "T." Only in reverse. Islands have literally been a part of Mr. Smith's experiences, both from a geographical perspective as well as from an artistic one. Islands have also functioned as a metaphor when the artist recalls his early life. There's no escaping the "island" idea when someone is born in Manhattan, as Mr. Smith was. There's no escaping the boundaries that islands suggest, either, considering that he was raised in a confining Tribeca studio/loft where he remembers a "big pile of cobwebs."

Growing up surrounded by art should have propelled Mr. Smith into painting, but he admits that his experience at Hunter College's magnet high school did not focus his creative endeavors. Rather, he recalls the fifth grade as a time when he got out of taking English classes to concentrate on making papier mache projects. The unlikely subject matter: Mayan art. "I was doing art without knowing it was art," Mr. Smith notes with a slight laugh at the thought.

We perceive a developing sense of solitude during Mr. Smith's formative years in New York, this isolation associated with the city itself. Perhaps that's why he would visit the Hamptons so often with a good friend. He finally left Manhattan in 1988, moving to California, "to get far away from New York," where he attended the University of California, Santa Cruz.

This particular time changed Mr. Smith's life: an illness sent him to bed, and out of boredom, he began making drawings from jazz album covers. Encouraged by his teachers, Mr. Smith pursued art with a vengeance, transferring to UCLA to major in art, and later earning a MFA from San Francisco Art Institute.

Disproving the idea that you can't go home again, Mr. Smith returned to New York, where, continuing with his art, he has slowly but surely evolved his own special style and subject matter. Much of his work is other-worldly, highlighting his drawing talents and featuring isolated land masses. (Here we see the influence of islands once more.) Some of Mr. Smith's pieces are landscape and golforiented like the one on this week's cover, stemming from his own love of the game. (Mr. Smith is an avid athlete who's also adept at beach volleyball.) As in his other work, Mr. Smith shows his penchant for the mythical aspects of his subjects. We think it's their sense of isolation that accounts for this mysticism.

Asked about being both an artist and a sportsman, Mr. Smith answers with his characteristic honesty. "I don't fit any stereotype."

Mr. Smith is correct. Even islands have their own distinct personalities, never to be duplicated by anyone else on the planet. —Marion Wolberg Weiss

Adam Smith has two current exhibitions of golf artwork: one is at Amagansett's Estia's Cantina until July 14 and the other is at Bridgehampton's Bobby Van's Restaurant until July 31. His website is www.adamsmithart.com preview: art looks at architecture

Architecture is considered the mother art. Historically, it has been highly inspirational; it reflected the passions of the times and it spoke to the masses. Think of the Pyramids, the Parthenon, the Taj Mahal, the Cathedral at Rheims, or even the White House, just to name a few. Or on a more private scale, think of the greatest of the homes of Long Island's Gold Coast, or Manhattan's Dakota and Chrysler Building, or Hearst Castle. Contrast those buildings with what many have dubbed Hamptons "McMansions," modern houses that follow the same old trend and seem to do nothing but copy the style of the house built by the Joneses. This is an unfortunate development, says East Hampton resident and architect Eva Growney. She laments that architecture is becoming mundane and has lost its moorings as a form of art.

Ms. Growney will moderate a discussion about this trend on Saturday, June 19, at 4 p.m., in Guild Hall's John Drew Theater. The discussion, entitled "Art Looks at Architecture - Discovering the Source of Creative Infusion," examines underlying sources of art as expressed in architecture and offers views on art as it relates to architecture. The speakers are four local sculptors who, according to Ms. Growney, "look at architecture in fun and spiritual ways." They will use examples of their own work to illustrate the role that art plays in choosing architectural themes and also explore what creative techniques and points of reference they have in common and what sets them apart. The artists are Strong-Cuevas, Dennis Oppenheim, Ned Smyth and Nina Yankowitz. Ms. Growney and local architect Bill Chaleff will moderate the discussion. Audience questions will be welcomed.

In talking about her concerns, Ms. Growney points to the typical quaint cottage, ubiquitous in the Hamptons, as an example. She says that there is nothing wrong with a charming cottage, but someone building such a home should design it in a way that gets her excited. "Go for the gusto" and "explore different possibilities," she beseeches. She wants people to know that there is a huge resource of people on the East End with incredible talent and brilliant, creative vision. They view architecture as an art form.

Giving talented local artists the platform during Saturday's discussion is no accident. Ms. Growney likes these artists because they "explore materials in new capacities," offering through their work a "commentary on environmental and communicational issues." She hopes that the discussion, which she notes is the first of its kind, will provoke thought - "stir up the pot" - leading to a renaissance of perceiving architecture as reflecting an artistic point of view. She wants to "take a good look at what we are doing," and to ensure that architecture is "expressive, exploratory, playful and uplifting," in a way that reflects each owner's sensibilities. Her advice: "Don't worry about the Joneses. Do what you are all about. This is the American spirit."

Tickets for the discussion are available through Ms. Growney at embgrowney@hotmail.com and (631) 907-1077. Tickets cost $15 each, or $12 each for a package of 10 tickets. Student tickets cost $5 each. Following the hour-long discussion there will be a "celebratory reception" in the Guild Hall Garden. Guild Hall is located at 158 Main Street in East Hampton. -David Stoll

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hampton

The Stepford Wives, appearing now on some theatre screens, are wimpy stepdaughters of the voluptuous Paula Prentiss, Katherine Ross and Tina Louise in the seminal women's rights, chilling horror pic of 1975. Those Stepford Wives were tough, flesh and blood heros despite being converted into robots programmed to be "good wives" devoted to keeping their suburban habitats clean, bright and happy by way of the best advertised products and, though not specifically stated - they were to service their husbands as efficiently as they service their vacuum cleaners.

The premise for the film, as presented by Ira Levin in his gutsy 1972 novel, remains as pertinent as ever, even though we've come a long way, baby! However, the updated version of the weird happenings in the perfect, trim-lawn town of Stepford, Connecticut has become a laughing matter. Not HA-HA funny - simply giggly TEE-HEE. Life in 2004 Stepford is a series of television giddiness with plenty of queer-eyed segments. Sure, the well-kept lawns are littered with funny comic bits, as if between commercials, but they are as out of place as dandelions. Originally, the green carpeted landscape was a battlefield dotted with land mines in the war between the sexes.

> The current version has the cast pelting each other with weeds. Blame it on "feel-good" Hollywood, Mainly, blame it on the director.

> The movie's director, Frank Oz, was a puppeteer out of Sesame Street, for crying out loud! Good for TEE-HEES and TEE-SHES, I guess but, just too precious for words - judging from his past few movies. A lot like Christopher (Chris) Columbus directing the Harry Potter films. They were "safe" feel-goods. He belies his name. He directs his energy to proving the world is flat. The latest, Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, was directed by Alfonso Cuoron, who's rescuing the series from the doldrums. Frank Oz has put the Stepford Wives up a creek without a pedal pusher.

It's a formidable cast put against the crew of 30 years ago. Golly, gee whiz! You've got Nicole Kidman, Glenn Close and Bette Midler, who's becoming typecast as a loud mouth Jewish novelist. Aside from this role she's been Jacqueline Suzanne. What next - Judith Kranz? (Funny, Jews are allowed in Stepford but African Americans are still barred, though Mr. Levin had a black couple as catalysts in his novel.) First, there is Nicole, who does Katherine Ross's role as the robot-resisting lady with chutzpah. Katherine was a photographer with aspirations. Nicole is a strident TV producer who quickly freaks out. Her husband, Matthew Broderick, a dweeb if there ever was one - not unlike all the other Stepford husbands who undercut all the negative powers of the guys who want their wives to love, honor and, obey! The other husbands are Christopher Walken and Jon Lovitz. It's easy to guess Lovitz is attached to Bette. Walken's another story, he's weird to begin with - can he get weirder? Not in this very ordinary melange of His and Hers mix of mixed up towels. Gee, it's almost as horrible as the incorrect position of the toilet seat.

Guy Jean de producer/writer/director Fraumeni producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major Film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

theater review: woman before a glass...by jan silver

The glass of the title is either a stylish martini goblet and/or a dressingtable mirror, but the woman is unquestionably the outrageous 20th century American heiress and art collector Peggy Guggenheim. Mercedes Ruehl gave a bravura performance as Peggy in Lanie Robertson's new onewoman play at the John Drew Theater on June 12.

Knowledge of classic 20th century modern art is not necessary to enjoy this piece, but it will add to the double-meanings embedded in the bitingly humorous monologues Robertson writes for Peggy. The opening scene has the impatient and spoiled Peggy tossing down an armful of dresses, then holding them up, exclaiming "This one's a Fortuny. .this, a Vionnet....this one's a Schiaparelli...this one's a Chanel.... I look like hell in Chanel.... There's a history of 20th century designer gowns here - and I have nothing to wear!"

Some brief background on the heiress. Born in New York City in 1898 to Benjamin Guggenheim, who earned his fortune with his brothers in copper, Peggy adored her father. He went down with the Titanic in 1912. She moved to Paris in 1920 and befriended many bohemian artists there including Man Ray, Brancusi and Marcel Duchamp. She married British sculptor/writer Laurence Vail. They moved to London where she opened an art gallery in 1938 and bore him two children, son Sinbad and daughter Pegeen. She divorced Vail, who she claimed is mentally unstable, and began to purchase as much abstract and surrealist art as possible (Picasso, Ernst, Miro, Magritte, Dali, Klee, Chagall, etc.)

She managed to get her family, several artists including her second husband Max Ernst, and her then out to the U.S. as the Nazis overtook France during World War II.

She opens a New York gallery and is instrumental in establishing several artists including Ernst and Pollock. divorces Ernst in 1946 and ends up in Venice where she displays her collection at her home, Palazzo Venier dei Leoni. She dies in 1979, willing her collection to be kept intact at her Venice palazzo as part of her uncle Solomon's Guggenheim Museum of American Art.

The Peggy Guggenheim depicted by Mercedes Ruehl in Robertson's play is an over-the-top bawdy libertine and self-taught connoisseur of 20th century American art. The play follows her life from 1963 on.

One of her lovers, playwright Samuel Beckett, tells her it is her duty to "preserve the art of our time," so she studies art appreciation by reading the art criticism books of Bernard Berenson. She meets Picasso and her comments about him are hilarious (and could be great final curtain lines for a first act in this play).

Lanie Robertson is a successful playwright who won the Outer Critics Circle Award for the Off Broadway production of his play about Billie Holiday, Lady Day at Emerson's Bar & Grill. He has had several other plays produced at regional theaters and has written for the musical theater and television. This performance of Woman Before A Glass was a staged reading.

Robertson, actress Mercedes Ruehl and director Casey Childs of Manhattan's Primary Stages, a co-producer of the reading along with the John Drew, have smoothly integrated many of Peggy Guggenheim's known habits – constantly smoking, drinking, wearing red nail polish, fussing over her menagerie of lhasa apsos - into the tumultuous tale of her adult life.

Woman Before A Glass: A Triptych in Four Parts is very well developed and should be given a full production in Manhattan by Primary Stages. It is performed in four scenes without intermission but feels like it should be two acts with the fourth scene fleshed out a bit. As now written, the lonely, personal end of Peggy Guggenheim's life is left slightly incoherent and adrift on the Grand Canal.

The grilling season is well under way and may include grill plans for Father's Day. With many more summer weekends to come, it's time to think about great salad additions to summer barbecues. I see bins overflowing with corn and the same cottony tomatoes that have been around through the year, yet I am not tempted to create salads with these ingredients at this time. Corn and tomato season does not begin for me until our farms are lush with these local gems.

Strawberries, though fleeting, are here and now, and I have been enjoying them in a myriad of ways. For a timely salad, I combined rosy red berries with local baby spinach in a piquant honey vinaigrette. The spinach can be prepped ahead along with the dressing, then tossed with the berries just before serving. If you're expecting a crowd consider the arugula salad with roasted peppers and zucchini in a caper Dijon mustard vinaigrette. The arugula has been looking good and is another green, like spinach, that benefits from the still slightly cooler weather.

If you prefer your berries at dessert time, opt for a mix of berries with mascarpone cream. And if Dad is in the picture for the weekend serve it over his favorite buttery pound cake.

STRAWBERRY SPINACH SALAD WITH HONEY VINAIGRETTE

Local fresh strawberries and spinach are a perfect seasonal duo for this timely salad. Serves 4-5

- 1 1/2 cups fresh strawberries
- 1/2 pound tender baby spinach leaves, washed and
- 1 1/2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
- 1 1/2 tablespoons rice wine vinegar
- 1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon honey
- 1 1/2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

1 1/2 teaspoons Dijon mustard Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper Toasted sesame seed garnish, optional

- 1. Rinse and hull the strawberries. Rinse and pat dry on paper towels. Halve or quarter the berries.
- 2. Trim spinach of any heavy stems and discard. Rinse leaves in several changes of luke-warm water, drain and spin dry in a salad spinner. If necessary, roll the leaves in a length of paper towel to absorb excess moisture.

- 3. In a mixing bowl combine the two vinegars, honey, mustard, salt and pepper to taste and stir to mix.
- 4. Toss spinach leaves in the dressing. Add strawberries and carefully fold into the spinach. Divide equally on 4-5 plates and garnish with toasted sesame seeds, if desired.

Note: To toast sesame seeds, place them in a small dry non-stick skillet and move pan slowly over low heat for a few minutes until seeds are lightly colored.

ARUGULA WITH PEPPERS AND ZUCCHINI FOR A CROWD

The colorful plate presentation of this simple salad from Northern Italy is striking.

Serves 8-10

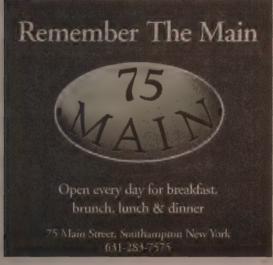

- 2-3 large red and yellow peppers
- 2 narrow zucchini, scrubbed clean
- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 1 tablespoon capers
- 2-3 bunches farm fresh arugula

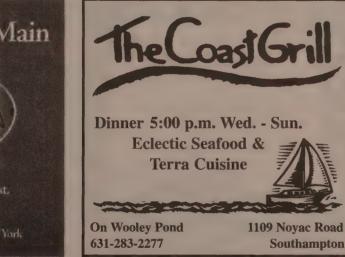

Vinaigrette

- 2 gloves garlic finely chopped
- 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
- 1 1/2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
- 4-5 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
- 1. Grill peppers on a medium-hot grill to char evenly on all sides. Turn peppers as each side blackens or place on foil-lined sheet and broil about three inches from source of heat to char evenly, about 10-12 minutes. Transfer peppers to a brown paper bag, close tightly and let stand for several minutes to capture the steam and loosen the skin. Transfer peppers to a strainer over a bowl to catch the juices. Remove core and seeds, then cut into julienne strips and reserve with a drizzle of oil. Can be prepared ahead and refrigerated in a suitable container.
- 2. Scrub zucchini clean, trim and discard ends, and slice thin. Spread on work surface and sprinkle with salt. Let zucchini sit for 20 minutes or so. With paper towels, blot out excess liquid. Heat vegetable oil in a skillet, sauté zucchini slices until golden brown. Turn with a spatula as they cook. Do not overcook; drain on paper towels.
- 4.Mix garlic with mustard in a small bowl.

 Gradually whisk in wine vinegar. Slowly add oil,

"Get away from the ordinary...Run with the Tide"

Dining in the Hamptons

We drove up to the Coast Grill, nestled between the Peconic Marina and a beautiful view of the Wooleys Pond in Southampton, on a grey and misty night last week. From the back roads of East Hampton, we had often driven past the restaurant on the way to Manhattan, but had never stopped there for dinner. Now, we made a special trip to try what has been called some of the freshest and best seafood in the Hamptons. The reputation is well deserved, but it really only begins to describe what is great about Coast Grill.

On the outside, Coast Grill is subtle, hushed, and romantic. On the inside, it's another story. The décor is relaxed and unpretentious, with a pervasive party vibe. The walls are wood paneled, brightly painted fish mobiles hang from ceiling beams, and Christmas lights are strung along the wall molding all year round. Add to these contrasts the elegant and sophisticated patrons, at one moment quiet and reserved and at others giddily slurping oysters and splashing cracked lobsters all over the place. It's fun.

My memories of the meal actually begin with dessert. I knew on my way out the door that I was going to write about this meal from the end to the beginning, as untraditional as that is, and just hope that no one minds. I was just so surprised by how excellent the homemade strawberry shortcake was, that even after enjoying course after course, I could still savor and appreciate dessert. The strawberries were sweet and tangy, the cream was freshly whipped and the "cake" was actually a biscuit of sorts, firm and moist and perfect to absorb generously drizzled strawberry sauce. It is one of those dishes that makes you realize how complicated it really is to make something very simple.

That was really the theme of the whole evening. As simple as the ingredients are, the dimension that Chef Brian Finegan achieves is remarkable. Everything we tried was just a little different than we expected, a little more interesting than it would be somewhere else, and even though it may have the same name as we have heard a million times, it is not the same.

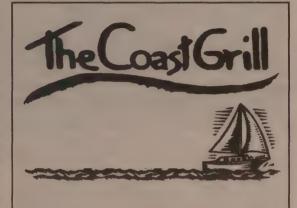

From the dessert, I move backwards in time to the entrees. I tried a special, grilled halibut over roasted corn chowder. Halibut is often served in a broth of some sort, chefs insisting that the contrasting elements of lightness and firmness make this the perfect fish for a liquid foil. But of course, Chef Finegan does not cater to expectation. The halibut is grilled until the outside has an actual texture that stands up to the richly spiced and chunky bed of corn chowder it is lucky enough to lie on, and the result is awesome. I loved this fish dish. My husband tried an equally unusual combination in the oven-roasted swordfish with an herbed mayonnaise breadcrumb crust. The dense fish is moistened by the mayonnaise that bakes into it, and the rich, buttery and salty crust takes comfort food to a whole new level. Both entrées were served with two different vegetable soufflés, and one potato soufflé.

Before this, we shared a Caesar salad and a Coast Grill clam chowder, New England style. The salad, which doesn't include anchovies, was excellent, with the Reggiano Parmigiana shredded and tossed into the romaine, rather than into the dressing, for another added texture bonus. Such were the homemade croutons, too. The dressing was vinegary and peppery and great. The chowder was filled with clams, and had an unusual and lovely fresh flavor, which I later was told came from the addition of fresh thyme leaves. This note really offset the typical creamy heaviness you might expect.

Then again, as I said, Coast Grill defies expectation. We shared the sashimi-style pepper crusted tuna appetizer, served with thin and delicate sesame noodles, which is a favorite of the very fortunate regulars. The fish, glistening brightly in the raw center, was darkened on the outer edge and encircled by a pepper crust that tempered the raw richness beautifully. The noodles were a real treat too – most often, sesame noodles are thick and gloppy. These were the perfect consistency, not heavy and not overpowering in flavor. We also tasted the jumbo South Fork crab cakes, perfectly lumpy and light at the same time, and for the piece de resistance, we grudgingly split an order of Peconic Pride Oysters on the 1/2 shell, served with a black peppershallot vinaigrette. I say grudgingly because although oysters have the reputation for being the perfect delicacy to share, an aphrodisiac to beat all aphro-disiacs, when something is this good, no matter how in love you are, you want them all. These oysters are basically harvested right outside the window of the restaurant, and obviously couldn't be any fresher. For oyster lovers, and there are many of us, that is one of the most exciting things about Coast Grill. Four and five star chefs from Manhattan buy their oysters from the same man as Coast Grill does, only they don't get to serve them on the same day that they are plucked from our glorious waters. It is not hard to believe when we hear that diners pile in in the summer to take in the sunset over the water, and slurp oyster after oyster. You can order them while you are waiting at the bar, or order them to meet you at the table when you are seated. In any case, they are a huge draw and a very special treat.

Coast Grill serves frozen daiquiris and margaritas, mixed drinks and beer and the wine list is extensive. Glasses are in the $6-$7 range, for house reds and a nice selection of house whites and goes up to $10 for a port or sparkling dessert wine. If you are feeling especially festive, there are a half dozen choices of champagne and sparkling wines, in all price ranges. Appetizers run between $8 and $10, entrees $18-$25, with fresh market prices for the daily selection of whole grilled fish, and the steamed or broiled lobsters. Coast Grill is open for dinner, Wednesday through Sunday this week. Call for reservations.

Michael Meehan, who has won accolades for his culinary creations at Mill River Inn, Tupelo Honey, and most recently The Seafood Barge in Southold, has been named culinary director at Peconic Bay Winery in Cutchogue. Meehan — widely regarded as one of Long Island's top toques — will oversee and produce events, tastings and other culinary endeavors for Peconic Bay. It's the first time on Long Island that a winery has hired a chef of Meehan's stature.

Citarella will be providing all the goodies for the upcoming Jazz at Jennings annual fete benefiting the Bridgehampton Child Care and Recreation Center. Hosted by ABC News Anchor Peter Jennings and his wife Kayce Freed, the bash will take place at their Bridgehampton home tomorrow night, June 19. Call (212) 875-2684 to reserve a table; do note some individual tickets may still be available.

Fore! If you have a drink at Sag Harbor's New Paradise Café during the U.S. Open, you might notice that something is missing. That something may be the cafe's owner Robert Durkin and popular bartender Howie Mathiesen, both huge golf fans. Howie will be taking a short leave from his duties at the bar for a stint as one of the local tv stations on-course commentator. Durkin has found the ultimate way to rub elbows with the players – by working as a volunteer on the player registration committee.

And if you are over at Shinnecock and walking the course, don't be surprised if you see Nick & Toni's cowner Mark Smith shushing the crowd as the fifth hole marshall. Smith, an avid duffer, volunteered his services to the PGA!

And finally, if you're lucky enough to reach the inner sanctum – the Trophy Room – know this: the panini that you might be eating is a Chock full o' Nuts creation AND that all the coffee consumed at the Open is ground daily at the Chock full o' Nuts outpost down the road in Southampton – and that ain't no hill of (coffee) beans!

And finally, we hear that Indian Cove Restaurant & Marina in Hampton Bays is offering special hours due to the U.S. Open. Located just 2 miles west of Shinnecock Hills Golf Course they will be serving till 10:30 p.m. on weekdays and 11 p.m. on Fri. & Sat.

The Maidstone Arms on Main Street in East Hampton (324-5494) will host a celebrity chef dinner tonight from 6 until 10 p.m. featuring Jay Shaffer of Shaffer City Oyster Bar (NY City). The four-course prix fixe is $65 per person plus tax and gratuity. Featured menu items include a first course of chanerelle dusted pan seared diver sea scallops over truffled white bean and potato puree and a third course of pan roasted soft shell crabs over grilled vegetables with roasted corn, grape tomato salsa and a chinotle sight.

On Thursday, June 24th Della Femina in East Hampton (329-6666) will team up with Amagansett Wine & Spirits to offer a unique, six course dinner pairing "Grower" champagnes from Terry Theise Estate Selections with a creative seasonal menu from Della Femina Executive Chef Michael Rozzi. Della Femina Wine Director John Cavallaro, Michael Rozzi, Michael Cinque of Amagansett Wines & Spirits and a representative from Terry Theise will be on hand to discuss the wines and cuisine available during this special dinner. Terry Theise Estate Selection are fine importers of Austrian and German wines and champagne. The menu incudes: honey lavender house cured salmon with chive blini, North Fork micro greens, and Wolffer Verjus and Polynesian barbecued pork & butter poached langoustine with grilled pineapple, green rice & exotic sauce. The dinner begins at 7 p.m. and tickets are $125 per person plus tax and gratuity.

If you are in the mood for great clambake, check out Oakland's Restaurant & Marina on Dune Road in Hampton Bays on Mon. & Tues. evenings for their "Famous Lobster Bash." For more information call (631) 728-6900.

Dining in the Hamptons Tea Time: To Your Health

Tea is more than just a beverage. In many cultures, it is a ritual. There is nothing like curling up with a steaming hot mug of tea on a cold night. The pungent aroma and flavor make for a fulfilling experience that appeases palate, mind, and body. Therefore, it is no surprise that tea has been an integral part of some of the oldest cultures in the world, serving as elixir, sedative, pick-me-up, and accompaniment to some of the deepest conversations. I've had many late nights with my roommates, pouring our hearts out over the fog of steaming mugs.

Like cuisine, teas vary from culture to culture, and each leaf has different benefits. But overall, tea is an extremely healthy addition to your daily routine, and it offers the perfect opportunity to take a break from obligations and clear your mind. Think "tea time" in England. At 4 p.m. every afternoon, the world stops and everyone relaxes over tea and crumpets. But tea was not even introduced to Europe until the 17th century. China is the homeland of tea. Tea shrubs originated there as far back as five thousand years ago, and it was first cultivated there about two thousand years ago. Tea is the most widely consumed beverage in the world after water, and 90% is grown in Asian countries.

The benefits of green tea are getting a lot of publicity as of late. Green tea is the most common tea in both China and Japan. Did you know the group of people with the longest life span in the world are Japanese women? This is due in part to the healthy diet, consisting mostly of fish and rice, and the fact that tea is the staple beverage. EGCG is a compound found in green tea, and is a member of a group of antioxidants called polyphenols. This antioxidant is powerful in helping to block cellular damage. Because green tea undergoes less processing than black tea, there is twice the concentration of polyphenols. The simple process of boiling water brings the temperature high enough to steep all of the healthful components of the leaves into the water. Green tea has also been shown to reduce cholesterol, and according to the National Cancer Research Center in Tokyo, "tea may be one of the most practical methods of cancer prevention available at present." It has been documented that tea lowers the occurrence of all types of cancers, especially digestive and urinary tract cancers.

There is a variety of flavored green teas now available that contain the same benefits as plain green tea. My personal favorite is "The Republic Of Tea" – Green Tea With Honey and Ginseng. It adds a hint of sweetness to the otherwise slightly bitter tea without detracting from the health benefits. Don't forget, though, that green tea contains caffeine.

If you are looking for a nice late-night tea, you may want to try "The Republic of Tea" – Red Tea. It also contains polyphenols, but it is caffeine-free. Chamomile is a classic tea to prepare you for bed. It relaxes the muscle tissues and can alleviate stress. It is thought that chamomile is good for the kidneys and spleen, and can improve digestion – though this has not been medically confirmed. Be sure to ask your doctor before drinking chamomile tea if you are pregnant; there are conflicting opinions on this subject. My favorite kind of chamomile tea is Celestial Seasonings Chamomile Mango – it has the relaxing power of chamomile with a subtle mango zing.

Another tea that has become popular in the United States in recent years is Chai Tea. It originated in India and is a delicious combination of spices. In India, many families have indivdual Chai recipes, and an invitation to a family home almost guarantees you a taste of their family tea. The ritual of sharing tea is a common manner of socializing. Which spices are included in Chai depends on the recipe, which varies from region to region in India. Generally, Chai consists of a rich black tea, heavy milk, spices like cinnamon, ginger, cloves, and pepper, and a sweetener. It can be served hot or cold. With the recent surge in popularity of Chai tea, there are plenty of brands readily available. But if you want to try to make your own, and improvise it to be passed on through your gene pool, follow this recipe:

Dining in the Hamptons

Undress Your Food

Food is sexiest when you can undress it. Some of the more, let's say, "forward" dishes just lie there, nude, for you to devour them, but this is tasteless. Good food leaves something to the imagination. Think of slicing a vanilla bean open with your fingernail, or the interior of the most alluring fruit of all, the pomegranate (its exterior merely a soft and misshapen skull). To have a love affair with your food, not just a cheap fling, discover how to cook in banana leaves and tin-foil papillotes. These simple, aromatic dishes can be wrapped, cooked, and undressed easily — no hidden zippers anywhere.

Wrapping ingredients in banana leaves, as with papillote, traps all of the flavor and juices, which results in an extremely tender and savory dish. Any quick-cooking vegetable, such as mushrooms, onions, or tomatoes, can be added to the parcels for more flavor, as can any herb. Vegetables that take longer to cook can be sautéed a bit and then added to the parcel. Cooking in banana leaves is originally an Asian tradition, and is common in Thai and Balinese food preparation. It is most often used in cooking light, flaky fish such as snapper, sea bass, sole and flounder. Banana leaves can be found at many specialty food stores, and the other ingredients are easy. This Thai dish uses fish filets and banana leaves six inches longer and three times as wide as the fish.

Bananafish:

Use 2 Snapper or Bass filets

Sauté: In a frying pan, heat up oil (5 tbsp). Sauté shallot (1, chopped), garlic (1 clove, chopped) hot chili (2, chopped), ginger (2 in., chopped), lemon grass (6 pcs, sliced) and sprinkle with black pepper.

In a bowl, season the fish with salt, pepper, and limejuice. Add the sauté and let marinate for a few minutes

Lay the banana leaf on a tray and top with green tomato (1/2 sliced on each leaf), lime leaf (2), and sweet basil leaf (1). Place the marinated fish on a banana leaf and wrap the fish, folding the ends together and securing with a bamboo pin (or toothpicks).

Place the fish packet on the rack of a grill, turning every 3 minutes until done (about 15 minutes). The packet should sizzle while it's cooking. Check the fish, it's done if it's opaque. If it's not done, and you haven't torn the thing apart to check it, rewrap the fish and put it back for a few. (Adapted from a Four Seasons recipe.)

Cooking en papillote is my preferred method, because tinfoil is less aggravating than funny little leaves. Papillote is French for the kind of paper package candies are twisted into. When wrapped, these tinfoil parcels look like boats – which is sometimes what they're called in English cookbooks. If you're a bit manic, you can even form the tinfoil into a swan or some other animal. Fish cooked en papillote is simple in the oven or on the grill. As with banana leaves, the best fish to use is flaky and light, although small steaks can be used as well.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

Take a piece of tinfoil 13 inches long by 15 inches wide or so, and fold up the sides so that they are sturdy, folding the tinfoil over until they are. Smear some olive oil on the bottom of the "boat" and add a thin slice of butter. Place the fish filet on top, and smear that with olive oil and some thin slices of butter. Now it's up to you how to flavor your fish. Try squeezing lime juice (1/4 cup) and lightly dusting the fish with chili powder and salt. Finish by spreading a pinch of chopped cilantro on top. I also like cooking the fish with paperthin fennel and sliced star fruit on top - it's incredibly juicy. To close the papillote, fold the sides of the tinfoil boat over the top of the fish, but not too near to it. Twist the ends. When you close it, make sure that no juice can escape, because it will try. Cook for 15-20 minutes, until the fish is transparent. Try to come up with different recipes, because it's one of the quickest dinners that's pretty to look at, fun to undress, and easy to prepare. You can take almost any fish recipe and dump it into this cute little boat (or...swan). If you've mastered the tinfoil, your favorite recipe for mussels can be transferred to a ball-shaped papillote and grilled.

With both bananafish and papillote, the most rewarding part is the delivery. Watch your friend's faces as they peel back the folds of this curious little present and hear them gasp when the puff of fragrant air escapes. Striptease wasn't this thrilling.

Ingredients:

1 tbsp fennel or anise

6 green cardamon pods

12 cloves

1 cinnamon stick

1/4" ginger root, thinly sliced

1/4 tsp black peppercorns

2 bay leaves

7 cups wate

2 tbsp Darjeeling tea

6 tbsp honey or brown sugar

1 cup milk
Boil the water, then allow everything but the tea, honey, and milk to steep for ten minutes in the boiling water. Then, add the tea and simmer for five minutes. Finally, add the honey or brown sugar and the milk

There you have it. Whether you want to be sipping green tea beside a plate of sushi, pouring milk and sugar into your English Breakfast, or passing along a recipe rich with Indian heritage, tea is one way to help you relax and enjoy health benefits and delicious flavor loaded with history.

6 cups mixed berries and freshly cut-up assorted fruits, such as strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, bananas, kiwis, etc.

Mascarpone cream

1/2 cup heavy cream, chilled

2 tablespoons sugar

Freshly grated lime zest

4 tablespoons fresh lime juice (1 large lime)

1/2 pound mascarpone cheese

1. Wash and dry all fruits eaten out of hand except raspberries. Whatever combination of fruits you are using, prepare a bowlful up to several hours before serving or early in the day. Refrigerate covered; bring to room temperature before serving.

2. Prepare the mascarpone cream: With electric beaters, beat cream in a cold bowl while slowly adding sugar until firm peaks form. Fold in the lime zest and lime juice.

3. In a separate bowl whip the mascarpone with a wooden spoon, then fold into the whipped cream, blending well. Can be prepared ahead and refrigerated in a suitable container.

3. To serve, divide berries into required number of dessert dishes and top each with a healthy dollop of the mascarpone cream. Or, spoon berries over slices of pound cake and top with the mascarpone cream.

AWAY AT SCHOOL . . By David Lion RATTINER

Book

It is graduation time around the Hamptons for most high school students. During my freshman year at Northeastern University in Boston, I wrote a book about my experience. If you are having a hard time figuring out what to get for your graduate you should see if you like this book. It is called Away@School and I think that there are only three places in the Hamptons that you can buy it. The book costs ten dollars and as of right now it is being sold at Paradise Books in Sag Harbor, the Dan's Papers office in Bridgehampton and on the Dan's Papers website. It's also sold in the Northeastern University bookstore, but I doubt that you will be hiking up there any time soon.

It was kind of annoying getting this whole thing together because I didn't really think that far ahead. I just knew that I really wanted to write a book because I thought that was cool. I didn't think much about who would buy it or why they would buy it until after it all kind of came together. But after thinking a lot about it, I decided the people that would want to read it the most are the parents of high school kids who are heading off to college, and also the high school kids themselves. So I figured that I would tell you about it now because everyone in high school is going to be graduating soon.

Anyway, that is pretty much the story with that. I'm not sure that there is much else to tell. My roommate read it and told me he thought it was funny. I looked at him and said, "Thanks, man."

The thing about getting people to read a book that you wrote is the fact that in general, I think, just about everyone is going to tell you they liked it, even if they didn't like it. I try to put myself in other people's shoes and I think that if somebody I knew came up to me and was like, "Hey, I wrote this book and I was wondering what you thought of it," I would take it, read it and even if I thought it stunk, I think that I would say that I thought it was good. So I get a little suspicious of people that say that they liked it. I mean, they wouldn't want to hurt my feelings by telling me it was awful.

I got my Dad to read it. "This is wonderful," he said. But I think that it is kind of his job to tell me that it is wonderful. If he read it and said to me, "This is the worst thing that I have ever read in my entire life," I would get a little depressed.

Writing a book and getting people to buy it is tricky business, man. The main reason for this is because I think that most people in general hate to read. They think of it as something they have to do and not something that they want to do. Why would you want to pay for something to read? That is the whole concept of this free newspaper in your hands. The whole point is that it is free. The only reason most people pay for something to read is because they have to. You have to buy the New York Times because you have to know the news. You have to buy a two hundred dollar chemistry book because you have to pass your chemistry class. It's crazy.

People want to laugh, I guess, but you don't have to buy a book in order to laugh. You can just watch a comedy on TV or go to a stand-up comedy place. I guess there are a few people that don't have TVs and those are the people that buy the books that are funny. If you are one of those people, then this book that I wrote is for you. I am almost positive that it is funny. There is this one part of the book where my roommate is described sleepwalking. Even I crack up when I read it and I wrote the

So I guess what I am saying is, buy this book. It is ten bucks, which these days really is not that much money. Buy it for your high school graduate. Go either on Danspapers.com and get it or walk into the Dan's Papers office in Bridgehampton and get it and even if you don't like it, tell me that you thought it was good.

NEW KIDS ON THE BLOCK

Yet another amazing gallery has blossomed at 38 Jobs Lane in Southampton called the Animazing Gallery. Established in 1984 with locations on Broome Street in New York City, and Hastings on Hudson in Westchester, Animazing Gallery has a reputation of hosting premier and significant industry events, acquiring exceptional original artwork. A charter member in The Animation Art Guild and MoCCA (Museum of Comic and Cartoon Art) they have also been voted by the American Craft Council as one of the top 100 retail galleries of American Craft.

The owners, Heidi Leigh and Nick Leone, who are married, are two of the most respected names in the industry today. Heidi Leigh has been a consultant for Christie's East and Sotheby's for more than a decade. A current director on the board of the Museum of Comic and Cartoon Art as well as a former board director for Disney Marketing, Miss Leigh has authored numerous articles for papers such as The New York Times and has appeared on both cable and radio including CNBC. Nick Leone is a renowned animation art collector and top expert in the industry and the president of Screamin Wedgie Entertainment.

Animazing is the exclusive gallery representative in New York of Walt Disney art, Fox's The Simpsons, Nickelodeon's Sponge Bob, Warner Brothers' Peanuts, Hanna Barbera, Cartoon Network with featured artists such as Charles M. Schulz, The Secret Art of Dr. Seuss, Tom Everhart (exclusive exhibitor of The Peanuts Paintings originals and his graphics on the east coast), David Willardson (Pop art by Disney artist) Neal Adams, Victoria Fuller (the first person to be granted the license to use the Playboy image and name in fine art), and Vicky Montesino's exclusive representation originals.

The Gallery's grand opening celebration is scheduled for Saturday, June 19, from 6 to 9 p.m. Since their location is next to the beautiful patio, there is room for everyone. Call 631-204-0504 or log onto their website at: www.animazing.com for further information.

After completing her three-year assignment as a Peace Corps volunteer in Kenya, Jennifer Monahan traveled extensively throughout Asia and the South Pacific before returning to New York City. She became so intrigued by the artifacts and art from the remote areas of the world that she concentrated on studying and collecting tribal art from Oceania. After winning a national award from the Appraisers Association of America in 2002, Jennifer decided to follow a dream, using her knowledge and experience while working on construction job sites, to open a small gallery. After moving to the East End, her dream finally come true, her shop Hidden World Arts Tribal Gallery finally opened on Memorial Day weekend at 720 Montauk Highway in Water Mill. The gallery is filled with unique and unusual items that Jennifer brought back from Melanesia, but mostly from Papua New Guinea and Vanuatu. "The Sepik River basin is in northern Papua New Guinea, which has a river system similar to the Amazon. The indigenous cultures there have extensive art traditions, and they vary greatly in the different regions around the river," Jennifer said.

For further information about this unusual one-of-a-kind gallery, call Jennifer Monahan at 631-252-1591.

An ex-banker with a shop in Bohemia for seven years, and a family home in Sag Harbor, Ellen McCarthy has opened a much needed western gear shop at 760 Montauk Highway at the Citarella Plaza opposite the Vitamin Shoppe in Water Mill on May 22.

Go West, which is actually east of Bohemia, is a beautiful space that has a large selection of western boots and accessories, motorcycle boots, cowboy hats, clothing, leather jackets, belts and a new selection of straw hats for the beach and garden. There is even jewelry and western giftware that includes wine glasses, picture frames, rugs, throws and much more. There is something for everyone, from the littlest cowpoke to the biggest cowboy or cowgirl.

Ellen is very happy that some of her loyal customers who traveled from Mattituck, Shelter Island, Southampton and East Hampton to Bohemia, have stoppped into her new location to welcome Go West to Water Mill, happy they don't have to go west, making the long trip to Bohemia.

Keeping the tradition going from the Bohemia shop, Go West still has live rockabilly music for their fall festival. They plan to have special events at the Water Mill store as well. Events such as Western art exhibits, (calling all artists), live music from time to time (calling all musicians) and more will happen here.

A grand opening celebration is on the agenda for June 26, with live Bluegrass music, and all are invited. WEHM will be on hand and there will be some great give-aways as well, so mark your calendar.

For information about this wonderful new shop, call Ellen at Go West at: 631-726-WEST (9378) or log onto their website at: www.gowestboots.com

One Of The Characters You'll Find At Hidden World

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

This is the beginning of a very busy two weeks with the U.S. Golf Open 2004 in progress. So, while your hubby is doing the golf thing, you can shop!

Starting out in Westhampton Beach, I thought I would surprise our Dan's Papers illustrator, Mickey Paraskevas, at his Paraskevas Gallery at 83 Main Street (right next door to the Margarita Grill). I was actually looking for something special for my sons Joe and Randy for Father's Day, and there they were; ties, in every color and pattern you can imagine. Fun and funky, yet works of art, Mickey designs the ties and they fly out the door. There are children's books, posters, and of course Mickey's famous paintings and Jr. Kroll. Stop in and say hi and check this gallery out.

I found a great source for Father's Day gifts at Hildreth's Department Store on Main Street in Southampton (Bridgehampton and East Hampton). Look for the BBQ Grande basket by Kodar for only $19.95, a Raindancer lawn sprinkler by Raindancer, $65, or the Lafuma recliner chair, $179.95, in navy, white, green and desert sage. I picked up the Bulova mantle clock for myself for only $125. All this and more including the cute golf themed items such as photo frames, cocktail napkins and bottle stoppers.

Also on Main Street in Southampton, at Dansk, you will find what you need for summer entertaining now through June 23. I found the Dansk San Nicolo twenty-piece stainless flatware set at 20% off, final price $22.36. Hey, for under $75 you can dress a table with service for twelve! Now that's a buy and a half. Check out the colorful Dansk "Bing" dinnerware in red and white for only $19.96 for a four piece place setting and the 20% off Bonus Dot sale. The matching glassware set is also available at similar savings!

For the spectacular one-of-a-kind wearable art jackets by Amy Zerner, Spiritual Couture, visit the Gayle Wilson Gallery at 51A Jobs Lane in Southampton. They will be available at the gallery until June 22. WOW!

The By Hand Artisan Fairs, featuring authentic handcrafts, is having their spring, summer and fall shows and sales with beautiful bags by Maureen, Deborah Haley Jewelry, Jbead jewelry and John Todaro, just to name a few. Look for paintings, photography, sculpture, pottery, stained glass, blown glass, mosaics, woodworks, fine jewelry, handbags, silk apparel, soap works, preserves and so much more. By Hand of 85 Post Crossing #A-1 in Southampton is holding their trunk show this weekend, June 19 and 20 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Bridgehampton Historical Society on Main Street in Bridgehampton. Mark your calendar for the one in Amagansett on July 17 and 18 at Miss Amelia's Cottage on Main Street. Stay tuned!

Green Monkeys at the Open

I love the "Hamptons Survival Gift Basket" at the Ann Kolb Gallery on Main Street in East Hampton. Each basket/tote or tin is custom filled with a selection of must-have items for the busy Hampton resident. What a perfect "thank you" if you are a guest for the weekend; it's whimsical and practical. My favorite is the "Hamptons Family Rainy Day/Beach Survival" tin that includes Folk Art, a small checkers board, a wood/craft puzzle, dishwasher safe set of four plastic drink cups, stirrers, bottle opener and book mark, all packed in a reusable tin for your shell collection. All that for only $155. You can also assemble your own collection at the gallery. What a great gift idea!

Further east in Amagansett, hidden away in the Amagansett Square, Anastasia Holland has re-opened for the season with a treasure trove of great designers, such as Charles Chang Lima, See by Chioe, Jenny Packhan, Julien MacDonald, Roberto Cavalli and Vivia shoes. This shop is one of the greatest finds of the summer with its beach and day wear, cocktail, evening and black-tie gowns and so much more. Check out the sales, bet you don't buy just one... You will return to this beautiful boutique; take my word for it!

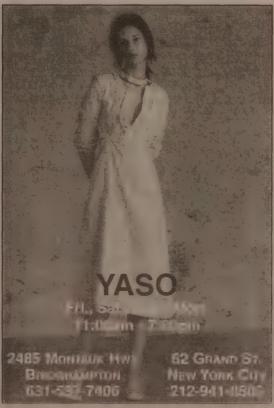

On the North Fork: Bedell Cellars on Main Road in Cutchogue is offering a special wine gift box for Father's Day featuring three bottles of the 1999 Bedell Cellars Cupola in a handsome wooden box for $79. The special gift set is also available at Bedell by phone (631-734-7537) and online at www.bedellcellars.com.

Until next week. Ciao and happy summer shopping!

If you know of, or are having any sales and would like to share them with me, or have any questions regarding the shops, sales or where to find something special, please email me at: shoptil@danspapers.com or fax me at 631-537-0500. I would love to hear from you...

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Old versus new. We have all heard the cliché, "They just don't build them like they used to." Well, let me set the record straight. Most cars today are superior to classic cars in build quality, handling and power.

The name of this column is "Classic Cars," so as you all know, one of my greatest passions is vintage cars, but I have to state my case objectively when it comes to comparing past cars to the present vehicles.

First, let's talk about build quality. Vintage cars were built of heavier steel, since plastic had not even been invented. Many of these beauties also had delicious little details like chrome window surrounds and dashboards that were designed to mimic juke boxes. The downside of their build quality is that most vintage cars have body and door seams that are so wide that they can be seen from outer space. By modern standards, panel fit was third world and chassis rigidity was spaghetti-like. When one drove over railroad tracks in a vintage convertible, there was enough cowl shake that in some models with high mileage, a door would actually pop open. On the early MGs, especially the pre-1956 models, chassis flex was actually designed into the car to be part of the suspension.

The paint on these vintage cars was long lasting because it was heavy enamel, but it was never that smooth. Unless the cars were expensively built, like a Rolls or a Dusenburg, which were painted with a hand rubbed lacquer, they could not compare with today's modern clear coat paint jobs. Let it be noted that lacquer paint would only hold its magnificent

shine for a few years before it dulled. Today's clear coat paint has a long life with one caveat; it will self destruct in continuously strong sunlight.

Mechanically, today's cars are vastly superior to vintage cars. All cars of the present are models of efficiency when compared to those of the past. They are jet planes as opposed to bi-planes. In 1967 I owned a Porsche 910 factory prototype racing car. It was literally the fastest two liter race car in the world. It had a state of the art engine that produced 240 horsepower at 8,200 RPM. Today, Honda produces a sports car with two liters that yields 240 horsepower at 9,000 RPM, and runs dependably to over 100,000 miles, never hiccups or needs expensive tuneups. Simply amazing.

Air conditioning, power windows and steering, disk brakes and high tech tires that make even ponderous SUVs handle, were not even available in the vintage car era. Safety, fuggedaboudit. Even race drivers raced without helmets. Seatbelts were only used in airplanes. Some of the hood ornaments on cars would have looked more at home on a picador's lance. The rollover protection in a convertible was your own head. Headlights, tail lights and windshield wipers were afterthoughts.

Sometimes I think we have gone too far, though. Some cars have enough airbags to float if they ever go off a bridge. Those new white headlights are blinding on high beam but boy, do they light up those country roads. Of course, the handling is the best asset of today's cars. Some big, new sedans handle better than sports cars built just a few years ago.

The new braking systems with ABS beat anything in the past when it comes to stopping a modern high speed automobile.

So what is it about vintage cars? Do they represent our memories of the past? Maybe it was your Dad's car, or your first car. When you were a kid, it might have been the car of which you dreamed, and now can afford. A friend of mine once said about his restored vintage car collection, "We're getting older, but our cars aren't." Vintage cars represent another time, perhaps a better time. Those who collect them can conjure up all kinds of personal reasons to cherish their old automobiles.

When you are at a car show and spot an impossibly restored car that is so good it could never have originally left the factory looking so perfect, or when you see an original car that has the well earned patina of age, respect these vintage jewels and their owners who are preserving our past. To most of the owners, collectors and dreamers who love cars of the past for their uniqueness, beauty, and the memories that they evoke, "They don't build them like they used to" is definitely a truism.

AND THE RIVER AND THROUGH THE WOODS WITH KEN KINDLER AND THROUGH THE WOODS WITH KEN KINDLER AND THROUGH THE WOODS WITH KEN KINDLER

Laurel Valley County Park is a little gem of a park, situated in Noyac. Curiously, it is absent from most listings of Suffolk County Parks. Where it is mentioned it's described as a "passive park for hiking and birdwatching." This beautiful and tranquil 148-acre park, maintained by the Southampton Trails Preservation Society, is definitely worth a visit.

The trails are well marked, but since there are four different ones in the park, it can be confusing. The Paumanok Path* runs east to west along the southern portion of the park. The Blue-Owl Loop, which joins the Paumanok Path at one point, and is *bisected by the Black-Owl Loop at another point, is identifiable by diamond shape signs showing a blue owl on a white background. The Yellow Owl Trail breaks off from the Blue-Owl Loop to take you to the south end of Wildwood Road, another good trailhead for the park. If you have a map, you will see that the Yellow Owl Trail takes you to the portion of the Blue Loop Trail near the scenic overlook in the northeastern corner of the park. From here you can look out beyond the Noyack Golf Course to Little Peconic Bay and, with the assistance of binoculars, you can view the North Fork. There is a map of the trails in the park posted on the kiosk, but it is stationary. Obtaining a map of Laurel Valley in advance of your hike is advisable. They are available through the mail for $4.50. Send a check along with your address to the Southampton Trails Preservation Society at PO Box 1172, Bridgehampton, N.Y. 11932. Be sure to state which map you need as STPS has several maps available. For more information call (631) 537-5202.

The mountain laurels normally bloom in June, but due to the harsh weather this past winter, they seem to have been damaged. On my visit there last week, very few buds were evident. The knob and kettle topography, the deep ravines, a glacial erratic, and an exquisite view of the Peconic Bay all provide plenty of geological interest even without the laurels in bloom. There is a varied ecology in this park. Large communities of bracken fern, American black locust, and oak trees co-exist here. This is a great place for bird watching; I have seen a great horned owl take flight, the mating of American woodcocks, and a red-tailed hawk circling above along with many other species of birds. The song of Baltimore orioles, the "tish-tish" of ovenbirds and the sounds of many other birds is a treat to the ears and to the soul.

Directions to Laurel Valley: From County Road 39, head east past Southampton College, bear left onto North Sea Road. Follow the sign for Route 52, Sag Harbor and North Sea. After traveling 2.4 miles bear right onto Noyac Road (Route 38). Travel 4.6 miles to Deerfield Road where you will make a very sharp right turn. You will find the trailhead approximately 1 mile south on the left side of the road. There is no comfort station or designated parking area, but there is room for several cars on the shoulder of the road opposite the entrance to the North Side Hills Development. I suggest that you enter the park from the Deerfield Road entrance because there is a kiosk and a map of the trail posted there.

If you wish to visit the nearby Elizabeth A. Morton National Wildlife Refuge after your walk through Laurel Valley, travel north one mile on Deerfield Road to the intersection of Noyac Road. Turn right and travel 0.4 of a mile east on Noyac Road. You will see the entrance to the Refuge on your left.

* The Paumanok Path is a 130-mile long path running from Rocky Point to Montauk. It is identified by white painted rectangle blazes on the trees. Horse whisperer. This phrase inevitably conjures up one of two images - either a person whispering sweet nothings into a horse's ear, or Robert Redford in the 1998 film. But horse whispering, or natural horsemanship, has nothing to do with talking to a horse (in words, at least). And last week a real life horse whisperer, Greg Eliel, helped East End riders understand this discipline in a four day clinic held at Mecox Bay Farm in Bridgehampton.

Although horses are large, powerful animals, they are actually quite docile, unless they have been treated cruelly, and want nothing more than to please their owners. For years, or perhaps more correctly, for all time, the techniques of training a horse have focused on breaking the horse's spirit and gaining physical control of the animal. Natural horsemanship throws all of those ideas out the window and aims to train the horse using a language he can comprehend, and fully understanding the instincts and impulses that horses are born with. In fact, many natural horsemanship techniques were developed through watching horses interact with each other in the wild.

Perhaps the clearest form of communication between people and horses is the application and release of pressure, which can be done when handling the horse on the ground and while riding. Pressure can range from squeezing a horse with your legs to pulling back on the reins. But it can also be something much more emotional, such as asking a horse to respond to body language. When pressure is applied, the horse should yield to it and be rewarded for that response by the release of pressure. It is important that any effort made by the horse is rewarded, even if the horse simply thinks about responding.

In the clinic, to demonstrate the use of pressure, students standing on the ground asked their horses to take steps backwards. This was done by gently pulling back on the leadline attached to the halter. When the horses responded, either by taking a full step backwards or by merely shifting their weight from front to back, the students relaxed their feel on the leadlines. This released the pressure and rewarded the horses. When pressure was released, more often than not, the horses would lick their lips and chew. This is a sign of relaxation and shows the owners that they correctly communicated with their horses.

For a natural horseman, the comfort and security of the horse is always the top priority. Much of what can be learned from this requires that horse people rethink their approach to training and riding. A horse does not know how to communicate with humans. It's our job to learn how to communicate with them. It all comes down to empathy and putting ourselves in the horse's shoes.

This begins before a rider ever gets on the horse. Horses are very sensitive to human body language, and when approaching a horse it is important to be aware of this. Are you walking quickly or slowly?

Are your arms crossed or hanging loosely at your sides? Are you scared of the horse? Having a bad day? Or are you in a good mood? It may seem hard to believe, but horses can pick up on all of these different emotions and will react accordingly. What's more, how you place yourself in relationship to the horse will also cause him to react in specific ways. For example, if you are leading a horse and turn to face him, he will instinctively stop. If you turn your back he will follow again.

This use of body placement was demonstrated in the clinic using an interesting exercise. Mr. Eliel laid two large paper bags on the ground and asked the horses to step over them. Chances are you wouldn't be alarmed by a large paper bag lying on the ground, but most horses are frightened by an unfamiliar object in their path. Mr. Eliel did not punish the horses for being scared of the bags and he did not force them over the bags through intimidation. Instead, he stood a few feet from their hind quarters, which told the horses to move forward, flicked a rope for added emphasis, and encouraged the horses to inch closer and closer to the bags. In a very short time the horses were stepping over the bags like they would a rail on the ground. An exercise such as this helps a horse to build confidence in himself and his owner, which is very important when jumping an intimidating fence, or walking past a piece of tarp blowing in the Natural horsemanship is like a key that unlocks the horse's mind. It is truly an incredible thing to watch a horse begin the day unsure of himself and mistrustful of humans, and in a few hours be totally relaxed, head down, eyes practically closed. There are thousands of horses and riders who have already benefited from this method. The sad thing is that there are even more who haven't yet learned that such an approach even exists. If you would like more information, I would urge you go to Greg Eliel's website at www.gregeliel.com.

Summer Skin

We all know our skin takes a beating under scorching summer sun. Even if you're one of those goodie two shoe types, who lathers on SPF 10,000, meaning you've got a porcelain pale Nicole Kidmanesque complexion and you're proud of it, or you take the fake-bronzed route in an attempt to look sun kissed but also preserve your dermis, you still need to take care of your skin according to the atmospheric conditions around you. In other words, it's hot, darn hot. And let's face it; it's only getting hotter.

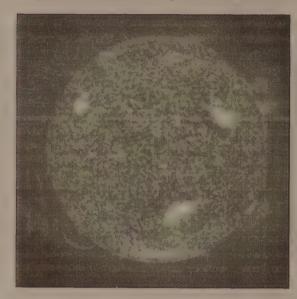

This week's column isn't advice about lying out in the sun – that's a topic for a future week. Ràther, this week, we're talking general skin care during these hazy summer days.

In summer we tend to sweat more. Heat tends to stimulate our sebaceous glands, which produce more oil secretions, making skin look greasy. At this time our skin also attracts pollutants, dirt and dust, which open up the pores, making them appear larger. All this means that our complexion tends to look duller than it should, yes, even if you do have a suntan. A build-up of dirt and open pores means that we first need to make sure that we use a good cleanser to really clean our skin, morning and night during the summer months.

Regular cleansing is essential and will get rid of residues that give skin that lack luster appearance. Plus, a deep cleansing exfoliation once a week will help to unblock pores and get rid of dead skin.

A good cleanser to try is Malin + Goetz "face cleanser" and "body cleanser," $12-45, the whole

Malin + Goetz skin care range is unisex, a new concept - no fuss, simple approach to skin care treatment, but with quality and a cutting edge design twist that Barneys and the like have signed up for. Couples can actually share product, which means less to schlep back and fourth on weekends and trips. And the good news – Malin + Goetz is making its Hamptons debut in the brand new "Theory" store, opening this week in East Hampton. Two reasons to head "East" for a sneak peek. Cleansers like these – that are gentle, at the same time effective, and maintain the skin's pH balance, are what's important. You don't want anything that's going to strip your skin of all its essential oils and minerals and some cleansers can do that. Fresh's "Milk" face cleanser, $34, is also a good one and washes away the day's impurities, without altering the skin's natural pH balance, plus it smells great and promises to help replenish the skin's moisture as well.

Once you've cleansed your skin, think about a deep cleansing routine to give that extra zing to skin, (we're talking the whole body), to get rid of any stubborn residues. Try something like Fresh's Sugar body polish, $58. Loofah and exfoliate with it in the bath for deep cleansing to reveal radiant skin. (PS, if you do have a suntan, don't be afraid to exfoliate it won't rub away color – exfoliating only brightens tan skin that can become dull because there's more dead skin on its surface.)

For face, try deep cleansing with Bliss' Exfoliators, $30. There's a range of them for different needs and skin types, all with fun names like "Low Fat" (oily), "Middleweight" (normal), "Fully Loaded" (dry) and "Quiet Type" (sensitive).

After cleansing, you might like the fresh feel of a skin toner/tonic, which also helps to revitalize the skin and cool it down.

Lastly, throughout summer, be sure to moisturize, moisturize, moisturize - all over. You can turn to Malin + Goetz for that, too. Mathew Malin says that their Moisturizers are ideal for summer because, "We use fresh ingredients that are invigorating in summer, plus our moisturizers don't leave any residue so you won't feel weighted down in the heat." As well as Malin + Goetz, you might want to try something like one of my favorites, Clarins Gentle Day Lotion, which is also very light and absorbs easily. Additionally, if you're going out and about, even just to run errands, you must think about using moisturizers/creams with sun protectors in them (you can use these as well as regular moisturizers). SPFing "all over" isn't just for the beach. A fabulous SPF cream, which can also be used to add moisture to the face, is "Caudalie's Vinosun Anti-Aging Suncare SPF 25," $55. This cream is in fact triple action. It works as an antiaging cream, containing antioxidants, it helps to lock in moisture and preserve the skin's tissue, plus, it contains SPF 25.

Pay particular attention to products for the eyes and lips. Again, go with good SPF protection and moisturizers/wrinkle control creams that are created specially for eyes and lips.

This summer, as well as sun, sea and swim, please make sure you take care of the skin you're in.

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS A Tale of Two Haircuts

I suppose it is only appropriate to begin this story about men's haircuts, this brief discussion of what it means to be a man having your hair styled in the Hamptons, by confessing that I, a man, spent two of the most enjoyable hours of my week gabbing with my local stylists.

I don't usually engage in that sort of behavior; I'm generally an in-and-out sort of guy, as far as haircuts go. I'll express my feelings about the length of my sideburns when asked for them. I'll make polite chit-chat when solicited, preferably about the Yankees or Bruce Springsteen. But I try to keep to myself until the end of the haircut, at which point I hand the barber a generous three-dollar tip, as if to tell him that it's not his fault things didn't work out between us. I'm a quiet guy, that's all, a writer type; he was great, really. It's not him, it's me.

But if writing this story has taught me one thing about what can make or break a man's hairdo, it's that good communication is as important as good collagen, and that a razor sharp wit is as important as, well, you get the idea. This is equally true at both ends of the men's haircutting spectrum, both of which, incidentally, can be found within two hundred yards of each other on Jobs Lane in Southampton. For men as well as women, at the tried-and-true barbershop as well as the oft-daunting but ever-alluring salon, haircuts are intimate events around which close and sometimes lifelong friendships are formed.

Kevin Maple has developed such friendships with several of his clients in his salon over the past twenty years. When he opened Kevin Maple Salon it was the first high-end stylist's of its kind in the Hamptons, and in the years since it has grown into one of the area's busiest and most successful. I had to call ahead and make an appointment to talk to Kevin for the story, as will anyone hoping to get a haircut there.

A fine Persian rug leads you in the door and up the stairs of Kevin's second story salon, and I was a little intimidated as I followed it up the landing, even after a pleasant receptionist knew my name and directed me to Kevin's waiting room. I was suddenly surrounded by almost all women, almost all of whom were strikingly attractive, all working upon each other with elaborate grooming tools and exotic hair-care lotions. I had stepped into a well-oiled machine of state-of-the-art cosmetic enhancement, and I found myself wondering if I'd come to the wrong place for a story on men's hair.

Upon talking to Kevin, however, I discovered that about a third of the salon's clients are men.

"It used to be that men could only go to barbers," he told me. But now, it seems, men have a broader variety of cosmetic needs to be catered to. "It started with the surfer dudes putting a little sun-in in their hair. Now there are a lot of graying boomers who still need to look young in the workplace."

As he showed me around his nicely appointed and newly renovated facilities, which include a skin-care center and a nail loft, he explained his philosophy that good conversation flows from good hairstyling, and vice versa.

"I won't begin a haircut until I know what the client's expectations and wants are. It's important to be on the same page. Then, when they have that confidence in you, they can just relax."

And that is when the hairdresser begins to serve his other, equally important role as a friend, therapist, and sounding board, for men and women alike. "If the women complain about their husbands," Kevin observes, "the men complain about their wives."

He believes people are inclined to confide in their hairdresser because of the relaxed surroundings and physical contact of the barber's chair.

If Kevin Maple Salon is an artists' studio, then the Jobs Lane Tonsorial Parlor just around the corner is a craftsmen's workshop. Also known affectionately as Charlie's Chop Shop, after its late owner Charles Germano, it is most certainly a barbershop of the old style. We at Dan's heard about the Chop Shop after our man on the street informed us that they were performing old-fashioned hot towel shaves with a straight razor for $30 a pop. There's nothing fancy about the place, not even the funny name; it's not called a tonsorial parlor because throat massages are the next big thing in cosmetic wellness therapy. It's because there was once a time, apparently within the memory of the shop, when barbers performed tonsillectomies and other minor surgeries as well as haircuts. The oldfashioned name reflects the proud sense of tradition that the barbers of the Jobs Lane Tonsorial Parlor carry with them as they turn out top notch haircuts for reasonable prices, and they were eager to tell me about the history of the shop, which has been on Jobs since the early 60s, when I told them I was from the paper.

When I told them that I'd come because I'd heard about the shaves, one of the barbers on the floor (John Jakubauskas, son-in-law of Charles) was also eager to inform me that the other (Charlie Jakubauskas, John's son, the one who'd made a name for himself doing hottowel shaves and who was performing one at the time) still occasionally did tonsillectomies, throwing them in for free with his shaves. Over the course of the next hour the ways that communication and haircutting worked in the Chop Shop became entertainingly clear. Egos, like hair, need a trim every now and then, and busting chops isn't a bad way of trimming them close without breaking the skin. In that way, it is not much unlike the hot towel shave that was described to me by the freshly shorn client that Charlie had worked on.

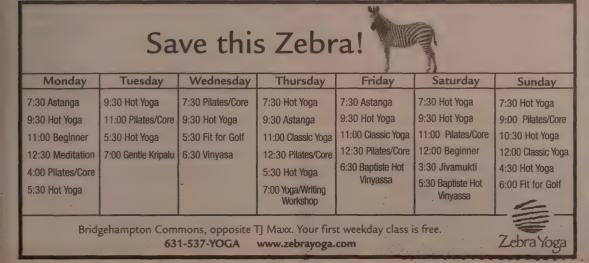

"He gives your face a good hard rub when you're done, but it's relaxing, like a massage. And your face comes out a lot softer and better looking than when you started."

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS

Hats Off To Summer

Whether you're sitting in your backyard, strolling through town, or sunbathing at the pool or beach, there's one thing that must accompany you wherever you go; the ultra-protective summer beach hat. From the meekest shade-loving sun phobic to the all-out total body-tanning sun worshipper, a wide-brimmed sun hat will keep those harmful ultraviolet rays from beating down onto your scalp and face, not to mention keeping the seagulls from doing their business on your otherwise unprotected head. So as you browse through the large selection of summer hats this season, take a moment to decide whether fashion or health will determine your choice. By the looks of things, many of the new beach hats to be found have all angles covered.

In choosing the proper hat for your summer excursions, you might want to take into consideration the brim of the hat. One thing you'll notice this season is that the BRIM IS IN. From narrow to extra large, how much of your face you need to show will be up to you. Perhaps the colorful lining inside the hat will get you more noticed. However, do you want an all-around wide-brimmed hat to offer maximum shade so as to avoid that back of the neck burn while rotating on your beach towel, or are you just interested in protecting your eyes and nose from the blistering rays? If the latter is more important, might be better off with a snugly-fit baseball style cap or visor in contrasting colors or tropical palm tree motifs, great for tennis, golf, volleyball, and other outdoor sports and activities, where standing in the sun for long periods of time will surely test your skin's burn factor. A cap with a wide-brimmed visor will protect those delicate extremities from the unwavering beams of the sun and also might prevent more freckles from showing up on your already sunbathed skin.

Colorfully patterned crusher hats are very cool right now for women and men. You can find them at The Gap, J. Crew or Old Navy. Solid or paisley colored cotton lightweight hats, each with their own individual flare, will be perfect to wear at that outdoor barbecue or picnic. Fold them up after a day at the beach and pack them in your bag and you won't have anything extra to carry or lose. If you prefer the more classic straw hats, they can also be found at the stores above. With either a wide floppy or frayed brim and round, square, or cowboy crown, these delightful millinery will get you noticed as you make your way from the beach to the club scene.

Or if you're more into the chic fashions and budget is not a problem, check out the spectacular women's hat boutique, Anne Moore in Bridgehampton, which many celebrities frequent. She sells a wide variety of gorgeous straw and horse hair hats from a mad hatter design to the square or round crowned hats to large domeshaped, cowboy crowned, or bucket shaped and softly curved hats with brims that go up or down for day or evening wear in many colors and sizes. The gigantic-sized brims on some of these very shapely and colorful hats are enough to reveal just a smile.

And if you're planning to attend the U.S. Open in June, you'll notice people will be donning all kinds of hats from straw to cotton to canvas to velour to terry to microfiber in colorful visors, caps and tropical hats. So as you follow Tiger Woods, Phil Mickelson, and the other great golfers around, you'll be edging for space to make sure your sun-blocking extra wide-brimmed chapeau has plenty of room to breathe.

But if you're just looking to make a splash with your friends at the pool, wear your ruffled, brightly colored, reversible, pin-striped straw or soft cotton floral hat and you'll cause a sensation. So whether you're going on a safari, engaged in outdoor sports, sunbathing at the beach, strolling under the high noon sun, or just having a bad-hair day, check out the new fashions of hat wear this summer and you'll be pleasantly, if not comfortably, surprised. From the streets to the shore, the sight of floppy wide-brimmed straw and cotton hats will abound.

All Decked Out

A local contractor from Hampton Bays, Joseph La

Face Construction Inc., (631) 728-2831, is also high-

What can be more inviting to guests visiting your Hamptons home than a front porch or backyard deck? The rocking chairs gently swaying in the summer breeze on the front porch beckon you to sit down and perhaps enjoy a Long Island Iced Tea while the backyard deck entices you to a late afternoon barbecue under the setting sun. Add to that a beautiful built-in outdoor pool or hot tub, surrounded by a wood or stone patio or a delicate wooden pergola wrapped in vines, and your outdoor setting will soon be transformed into a tropical paradise. You may never want to venture any further than your own front steps. But getting the particular look and feel of that deck or porch may take some & imagination, if not a few helpful hints.

You have to start with basic materials. When building a deck these days, materials range from natural woods to polystyrene plastics. How much maintenance you need to keep up your deck each year depends on what materials you choose. The most maintenance-free type of deck is the synthetic one. You can purchase many of these new plastics at Home Depot and they do not require staining, sealing, waterproofing or refinishing. Veranda and eON are some of these new brands. They have the look and feel of natural wood and come in colors such as redwood, pine or cedar. They are easier to have installed and are more durable than traditional deck woods.

Or if you're a purist who prefers the natural look and feel of wood and doesn't mind the maintenance, there are plenty of carpenters around ready to build your dream deck or palatial patio. Tony Villar, (631) 727-0309, an East End artist/carpenter, specializes in building decks on many beachfront homes, not to mention clubs and pools in the Hamptons and Montauk. His fine craftsmanship and attention to detail make him a highly-skilled carpenter with an original style. Recently he built a beautiful cantilevered mahogany deck onto the second level of a Montauk home overlooking the cliffs with a breathtaking view of the ocean. The brilliant glass panels capped with an oak wood railing open ly recommended for mahogany decks, as he has worked on homes throughout the Hamptons. Although he is a contractor for many brand new homes, he will be happy to take on a deck—especially mahogany, which is one of his specialties. And after a hot day at the beach, what's more relaxing than coming home and stepping into your outdoor hot tub? For a beautifully designed single or bi-level mahogany deck with stairs leading up to your hot tub, call Tucker Geery of Montauk, (631) 668-3989, and you will be assured of a high quality, long-lasting and aesthetically pleasing result.

Aside from choosing plastic or natural wood materials for your deck, porch, or patio, other things to consider include the size and shape of your deck, whether there will be built-in seating and room for deck furniture and planters, a pergola to give some shade, the shape of the railings, stairs, posts and post caps, and spacing of the balusters. Some decks have vertical balusters evenly spaced with curved or straight railings set off by post caps, and others have horizontal boards which can be used as back supports on built-in seating. Planters can be placed around to give a garden feel to your deck.

A narrow, rectangular deck works well when space is limited. You can still add a dimension to your house and be able to enjoy lounging outside with a few guests. For a more spacious area, a circular deck is great for those late afternoon beach parties when you and your friends can gather around for a barbecue or just sit on the steps while chatting. And when everyone's gone, you can have a few drinks, lie back in your deck chair underneath the crisscrossing rafters of the pergola, and watch the sun go down. So whether you're throwing a big party, barbecuing with some friends, or just relaxing in your hot tub under the moonlit sky while a cool breeze blows by, your comfortable deck will provide you with a new level of entertainment.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Defense Against Bloodsuckers

During the week, I often dwell on the image of waking early to a warm, sunny day and gardening. Unfortunately, this image has a drawback – one of the most common garden annoyances, the mosquito! On one recent gardening weekend, I was the host to no fewer than a dozen bites.

Of the more than 2,700 mosquito species, the common house mosquito, Culex pipiens, is the main culprit involved in human attacks. This mosquito is prolific, and lays its eggs in virtually any receptacle containing water that shows evidence of some decomposing, organic material. Mosquitoes can create a fully developed, new generation in standing water that lasts no longer than four days. Eliminating standing water significantly reduces the potential for mosquito bites and is the best way to control these pests. Habitats such as discarded tires, dirty bird baths, rain gutters, plastic wading pools, and tree holes that collect water quickly turn out thousands of mosquitoes in a single season. In fact, used tires are the principal mosquito incubator in the U.S. It is important, therefore, to exercise diligence in reducing stand-

It is also important to control mosquitoes because this pest can carry the West Nile Virus. Lucky for gardeners, the house mosquito is infrequently infected and not generally active between the hours of 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. It also has a limited range of flight: a few hundred yards. This means the likelihood of contracting West Nile infection from a mosquito bite is extremely small.

While controlling habitat controls mosquitoes, I have found a number of organic methods are useful for fending off mosquitoes that have emerged. For example, installing a bat house can attract these useful, winged wonders that eat away at mosquitoes. Bats are a great ways to eliminate mosquitoes since they ingest hundreds of the insects per hour. They are non-toxic and fun to watch! Purple martins can eat their weight daily in mosquitoes. Installing a purplemartin house in an open air area will attract these useful and fun to watch birds.

In addition to using insect-eating animals to control mosquitoes, there are organic products on the market that will reduce the number of bites you receive. Look for over-the-counter products containing the natural insecticide pyrthrin. Produced from the pyrethrum daisy, Tanecetum cinerarifolium, pyrthrin is a contact insecticide that kills mosquitoes when they touch it by paralyzing them. Pyrthrin is not toxic to most helpful insects such as bees, though it is toxic to ladybugs. Pond fish and small animals that eat fish are also susceptible, but not most birds or mammals. While pyrthrin is quite effective, it breaks down in sunlight. This eliminates its long-term environmental pollution, > but means the products need to be used frequently to be effective.

> Pyrethrum daisies are easily grown on the East End, and you can use the flowers, or other readily available essential oils (citronella, lemon grass, eucalyptus, castor oil, peppermint, lavender, and cedar), to make organic insect repellents that are quite effective against mosquitoes.

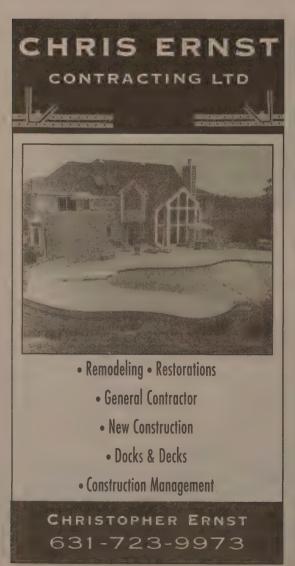

Mix rubbing alcohol, witch hazel, or vodka with one of the essential oils listed above. A mixture of 2 parts essential oil to about 10 parts alcohol is a good ratio. Shake the mixture well before each use. Apply just before gardening. I have also found that a few drops of one of the essential oils in shampoo or liquid soap counteracts their perfumes and is helpful to reducing mosquito attacks.

If you grow pyrethrum daisies, you can also make your own pyrthrin by gathering and drying the flowers. Grind the flower heads to a fine powder once the flowers are dry. Mix the powder with a little water to make a viscous liquid, and add this liquid to alcohol, shampoo, or liquid soap. I have found that a couple of teaspoons of the mixture to a cup of alcohol is fairly effective. Be sure to store the mixture in a tightly-lidded container to retain its potency. Apply a little every half hour or so.

While we will never fully eliminate the mosquito, diligence and ingenuity seem to pay off when dealing with mosquitoes. In fighting the mosquito, it is clear that "heaven helps those that help themselves!"

Everybody Must Get Stones?

In three hundred years, archaeologists will descend upon Long Island and ask this one simple question: How did so much Pennsylvania Wall

Stone get here? There are several answers they might come up with. The mystics will say aliens are from Pennsylvania and their goal is to change every ecosystem into their own, the realists will theorize that there was a mass migration of the Amish, and the skeptics will say that people had really bad sensibilities.

When approaching a landscape, the individual mustn't think that this is simply some dirt to throw rocks, trees, flowers and sod down on. Belgian stones or cobblestones have been the ultimate status coup of all time. An inexpensive symbol of status that every suburban house uses to line either side of the driveway, a retaining wall of Pennsylvania Wall Stone and maybe some sandstone for a sidewalk, but what does all that mean? Do these additions to a property truly improve the aesthetic quality of a native landscape?

Stone and rocks must be used in the same way as a tree, a shrub, and flowers. The colors must all interact, and not just for the three months of blooms; it must work in autumn when the brilliance shimmers on wet leaves as they morph into a cornucopia of colors. The stones must be bold, must have purpose, and must complement the landscape.

Stones and rocks in the garden can also be used as a catalyst for microorganisms. By forming colonies of stones in your garden the stones absorb heat, thus warming the soil and helping microorganisms feed on other microorganisms in the warm soil and breaking down into the vital nutrients that are necessary for your plants to be strong and beautiful. All this contributes to the fertilization process, helping the soil remain potent. The garden or landscape is an ecosystem of itself; the stones should function within that ecosystem and not as an inhibitor.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art, The Museum of Modern Art and The Frick Collection are just a sampling of the fine art collections and furnishings we have protected from sunlight induced damage.

Our window coatings offer significant fade, heat and glare protection while maintaining the color, clarity and integrity of glass without sacrificing your view.

In a good organic garden every item placed on the ground will have its function. Runoff will be controlled, the soil will stay warm, the microorganisms happy, the plants, trees and shrubs will all be strong. If you treat your landscape as an organic being, refrain from using chemicals and encourage this healthy soil, then the plant will have a strong immune system and all the problems you are accustomed to complaining about, bugs, dead branches, rabbits, etc... will all disappear. But if you build an alien stone wall, pave an enormous driveway, use tons of concrete and retention, and disallow the ecosystem to flow through itself, then you will have created the very city you intended to escape by moving to a home in the country.

The notion is to treat a piece of property like a canvas or a blank page. Any artist's goal is to rethink his space into something fresh and original. If it helps, think of it as abstract landscaping. Invert rocks, find rare specimens, put one large boulder in the shadow to sit on and contemplate. Some of the most interesting uses of stones are the ones that take these traditionally used pieces and change their purpose. Mess things up, take something that has been used for hundreds of years for one thing and one thing only and completely abstract its use. In doing so, your landscape will be fresh looking, and more importantly it will be an extension of your individuality.

Think about your purpose for the garden and place your stones and rocks accordingly. If you live on Long Island, why bring in a piece of Pennsylvania when you could use your own surroundings?

A Preserve on Barcelona Neck in Sag Harbor becomes a memorial. The preserve will be named for Linda Gronlund, a Sag Harbor resident who died on United flight 93, victim to 9/11 attacks in 2001. The state-owned wetland preserve will hold a ceremony on site in the near future in Ms. Gronlund's memory.

On the Market:

"A horse farm, two ranches and a vineyard."

The Hilltop Ranch in Montauk, a long established equestrian property on 14 acres is up for sale. The ranch, that consists of 4 separate lots, borders what seem to be endless acres of parkland and natural riding trails, and boasts broad views of Montauk Lake, the Atlantic Ocean and the LI Sound. The working ranch has a 5100 sq ft barn with 15 stalls, a work shop and caretakers' quarters. It is being cobroked by Allan M Schneider and the Corcoran group, both in Amagansett.

Also in Montauk is the Thunderbolt Ranch, which is just shy of 5 acres and is actually three separate parcels. The oceanfront compound-style property on the bluffs consists of a 1,500 sq ft main house and 5 additional guest quarters. It is exclusively listed with Kathleen Beckman Real Estate at $16,000,000.

In Sagaponack, a 19 acre horse farm. It has a 3000 sq ft home, a five stall barn, 3 silos, paddocks and 3 additional out buildings. Near the beach, the 3000 sq ft home sits on prime farmland. It is listed at $11,000,000 with both Schneider and Corcoran.

On the North Fork, Galluccio's 82 acre vineyard in Cutchogue, is going for $7,500,000. The family owned property and tasting room was formerly Gristina Vineyard and was purchased by Vince Galluccio in 2000. The winery has some of the oldest established grapes on the North Fork. 42 of the 82 acres are planted. The vineyard and its wines have been featured in NY Times, Wine Spectator and Wine Enthusiast Magazines.

The landmark commercial property that has been doing business as Water Mill Antiques is now for sale on Main Street in Water Mill. This 1900 sq ft circa 1800 Greek Revival home-turnedshop is an already established business and has an owner's apartment and loft above. There are 5 acres of grounds and room to expand parking. It is listed with Harris Brown Stevens for $1,900,000.

In the Pipeline: 60 acres are being reviewed for a preservation purchase this week on the North Fork. The Town Board will be hearing a plan on the massive North Fork parcel on the sound.

Taking Place on Hamptons Turf:

WCI Communities, known for developing high-end recreational real estate, such as the Old Palm Golf Club in Palm Beach, just acquired Spectrum Properties on Long Island and will be hosting a series of events geared to golf celebrities and professionals during the US Open. The company has built marinas, golf clubs and luxury resort homes in various parts of the country. They have rented an estate in a prestigious area of Southampton to hold the events during the US Open. Names such as Raymond Floyd, a 1986 US Open winner at Shinnecock, and Bruce Zabrisky, who has played the open five times, are just two associated with the promotion. Kyle Renson, spokesperson for WCI, says that they hope to draw golf professionals and other celebrities visiting here for the Open to view the offering of their new club and other resort properties.

Prudential Douglas Elliman in Southold is having fun and finding inventive ways to sell Real Estate this summer. The brokerage is hosting a Beach Party at one of their water front listings in East Marion this week. The spacious contemporary has views of the bay, salt marshes and the Sound. It has its own private beach where LI brokers will enjoy music and delicacies prepared by 3 chefs and served on the beach.

Various fundraisers will be held all summer long on Estates throughout the Hamptons. Last month, Ina Garten, cookbook author featured on the Food Network, hosted a benefit at her sprawling East Hampton home for 300 checkbook toting guests. The cost of a seat at one of these charitable events can range anywhere from $50 a plate to $50,000 a table.

Rentals:

Commercial offices in Montauk

A suite of offices that overlook Montauks Fort Pond are available for $96,000 annually. The rental includes 4500 sq feet of office space in an old English barn style structure. It is listed with Prudential in Bridgehampton.

Private Golf Course Country Club Living at Laurel Links. $1,975,000

What's a Few Cocktails Between Friends? Usually a good time unless, of course, it happens in the front seat of a parked car. A phone call alerted police to a "car par-tay" on Three Mile Harbor Road in East Hampton at the town dock. Officers discovered upon arrival one of the reckless revelers, who was hampered by hootch, splayed out in the front seat with the keys in the ignition. Not to jump to conclusions... sobriety tests confirmed the obvious and the luckless lush was taken into custody.

Teen Thieves Vigilante Justice. Ricky's NYC (now in the hamlet of East Hampton) knows how to get a message across. The owner of the chic retail boutique posted snap shots of three teens in the store's front window that he alleged had made off with purloined goods. Under their photos read the caption... "A few girls up to no good, we will have you arrested and embarrassed in East Hampton." According to police reports, the girls were harassed at school by friends who were able to ID the trio, though their faces were blacked out in the computer photos. This led two of the mothers to complain to authorities as their daughters denied pilfering any of the store's trendy beauty products and cosmetics. The "court" rests until surveillance video footage is reviewed.

Once Across the Napeague...Almost Anything Is Possible. A good Samaritan picks up three hitchhikers in Amagansett on Montauk Highway and drops them off in Montauk. The next > morn, one of the trio allegedly gets into an argument with the manager of the Montauk IGA (might I guess over the produce selection?), makes a hasty departure from the store and leaps into a Jeep Cherokee, the same vehicle that provided safe passage to town the evening before.

The suspect then sped around the parking lot in the SUV before exiting the vehicle to make a quick geta-way on foot.

Bull's Eye! A bouncer from the Montauk hot spot The Point reported a soused sot, who, upon leaving the establishment, kicked off his shoe, which ended up sailing through the watering hole's front pane window, shattering the glass. Payment of damages are being negotiated.

Guys Just Wanna Have Fun, Too. A guest at the Memory Motel in Montauk left more than a memory. A fire extinguisher that was discharged in the room tallied up damages of $250. Guess the guest will think twice about inviting acquaintances over for a little tete-a-tete at 4 a.m. While on the other side of town at the Tipperary Inn, guests rang up $1,130 in additional charges as a result of damages to carpets, furniture and walls. According to the Inn owner, the fellas were "just being rowdy".

Have Motor Will Travel. Valued at nearly one grand, a boat with motor vamoosed from a Beach Club Lane home in Wading River.

A Yen For Chinese? According to police reports, a Riverhead man armed with a knife busted into the Lucky House Chinese restaurant and removed $300 in cash from the register. Authorities put the word out they were looking for the suspect, which resulted in an arrest the following day.

WHO KNOWS? Dear Dan,

You know everything about everything in the Hamptons. What is that huge residence just north of Scuttle Hole Road on Day Lily Lane in Bridgehampton? It is enormous! I asked the ladies at Country Farms just down the road and they had no idea what it was or who lives there. Looks big enough to house the Olympics!

Hope you can satisfy my curiosity. Thanks! Elaine Sorrentino Via E-mail

DUM DUM DE DUM

Got a silly question, maybe you can help me with... I know you guys have been dealing with things out there for years...I was wondering if you can help me figure out if there are any major events which would cause a problem with traffic for the weekend of July

The reason I ask is my wedding is that weekend. and I didn't know where else to check. I thought you guys would have the entire scoop!

Also I wanted to order about twenty-five papers to put inside my wedding welcome bags...but I wont need them until the second week of July. Is that possible to get them?

Thanks for whatever info you can give me to help me prepare for this weekend!

Blake Wenitt Via E-mail

Best advice - get married DURING the week.-D.R.

Dear Dan.

Just a small nit-picky point about this article you did on the Sag Harbor movie theatre and the owner of the tool and dye shop. His name is Andy Toro, not Joe Toro. He is my grandfather and has fixed everything around the Hamptons since the sixties when he came down here to work for Bulova.

Anyway, I just thought you should have the name right. Thanks.

TICK TIME Dear Dan,

The article written by Ken Kindler about hiking was very informative for hikers. He covered just about everything you need to know except one very serious and scary thing. Ticks!

FRED THE SWAN

Dear Dan.

Swans may be friendly, but some can be crazy and out of control, like Fred the Swan. You might think a swan named Fred wouldn't be crazy. Well I'm sorry to say, you are very wrong.

It all started when me, my dad and my mom went to our summerhouse in East Hampton. We were pretty bored. Until an idea burst into my mom's head. "Why don't we go kayaking?" she replied. It sounded like a great and marvelous idea. So we all bolted to the kayak rental store. We rented two kayaks. A full one for mom and one with two seats for me and dad.

Before we went to kayak mom saw a sign, it said "BEWARE OF FRED THE SWAN!" I was worried, so I asked mom, "should we have anything to worry about?" I asked. "No, nonsense!" said dad. "Yes, it's probably just a joke!" said mom. I still wasn't sure though. Well anyway we got into our kayaks, but before we set out mom showed me how to paddle, left, right, left, right. Then she told me how to stop, out one paddle in the water and hold it there. So then we took off. Mom was way in front of us. And that's when we saw him, Fred the Swan! Fred glared at us for a moment, then he swooped to attack! "KAH, KAH!" He screeched. He was coming close, his wings shot up to go faster! Even though I was terrified, I kept thinking in my head, he is just trying to be a good father to protect his family. Dad and I paddled so fast that we got away from Fred in only 5 minutes! That was a fear I would never forget.

I bet lurking in the lake, Fred the swan is waiting... for his next victim!

My husband and I can tell you it is very upsetting to find a tick burrowed into your skin. We have both been bitten several times. It is time consuming (trips to the doctors), costly and could affect your health for a very long time.

Perhaps he could do a follow-up piece and inform your readers of this tiny black menace, how to avoid it and what to do if you find one on you or if you are bit-

GALA GOAL GOTTEN

Dear Dan,

Well we did it! That was some Gala. I have been getting an incredible amount of positive feedback. It seems as though everyone really enjoyed themselves and everything looked beautiful.

Now for the even better news - WE MADE OUR GOAL. We were successful in raising $210,000 net (goal was $200,000) for the American Heart Association. That is up from $172,000 net last year. Each and every one of you had something tremendous to add to this event and you should all be very proud.

I am honored and thankful to work with you all on such a grand event. I will be scheduling a wrap up meeting for all of us to share our opinions on things that were great and things we could change. It is very important for me to hear all of it, so I hope you all make an effort to come.

Thank you again for all your effort and for caring about the success of the American Heart Association.

Heartfelt thanks.

PS: If anyone has Mike Levine's email please forward this to him or send me his email. Thank vou

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpecting motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an ellipitical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.

LABOR OF LOVE PET CARE SERVICE

Deborah Liccardi Licensed Veterinary Nurse Available for training, pet sitting & nursing. 631-537-0326

My name is Van. I am a 2 year old, male Malinois Shepherd. I was imported from Belgium. My brother works with Special Forces operations in Iraq. I am smart, quick and handsome. My current owner is a very senior executive with the CIA. As you might imagine, he is very busy now and does not have a lot of time to spend with me. So, I am looking for a new home. I am housebroken and have been around children. I really need a new owner who can spend time with me. I prefer a lot of room to run. If you think I am the dog for you, please call Richie at (631) 537-0664.
